Congress Given Plan For Cradle-to-Grave Security After War

U. S. Partnership With Industry Also Urged by Resource Board

A postwar plan for America, recommending among other things that the Federal Government form a peace-time "partnership" with private owners in such "crucial" industries as aircraft and shipbuilding, was sent to Congress yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Accompanying it was a plan for a "cradle-to-the-grave" expansion of the Social Security system.

The two were the work of the National Resources Planning Board, headed by the President's uncle, Frederic A. Delano.

Calling for jobs for all after the war, the planners made recommendations for converting war plants to peace-time enterprises, for public works projects, for extending rationing and price control after the demobilization and for setting up a new National Transportation Agency.

The report urged measures to uphold labor's rights and its responsibility in "sharing in management."

Statement Issued

Under the heading of "Extension and new forms of joint private and governmental partnership," the National Resources Planning Board said:

"Government is already taking considerable part in the management of the many war industries which have been greatly expanded by the use of Government funds.

"Consideration should be given to the desirability of various types of partnership in the direction of those industries of crucial importance in both a wartime and a peacetime economy and in which the Government has made great investments.

"In this category are aluminum, magnesium, shipbuilding and aircraft. Government has a direct responsibility and should participate in the decisions as to what areas and what concerns should continue to operate in these industries."

Like Beveridge Plan

The private-governmental partnership, the report said, should be worked out through "use of mixed incorporations, granting or insurance of loans, or other joint ventures."

The National Resources Planning Board sent to the White House, and the President forwarded to Congress, two reports some 721 pages in length.

One was the "Post-war Plan and Program" and the other "Security, Work and Relief Policies." This latter was likened to the much-publicized Beveridge Plan in England, but officials of the National Resources Board emphasized that it should be called the American Security Plan.

The reports went to a Congress that has shown deep hostility to the National Resources Planning Board. Last month the House eliminated from an appropriation bill an estimate of $1,400,000 to run the board for the fiscal year of 1944, which begins July 1 next. It also denied a deficiency appropriation of $200,000 for the current fiscal year.

"Super-Boondoggling"

The Senate Appropriations Committee likewise has refused the board a deficiency appropriation. It has not acted on the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill from which the House pruned $1,400,000 for 1944.

President Roosevelt showed his displeasure with the House a month or so ago when, in the course of a press conference, he said that those who voted to

Highlights of Postwar Plan Proposed by Resources Board

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefit payments to workers under social security who become ill or disabled.

Federal aid to qualified youths who desire college training.

Extension of social security to some classes now exempt.

Aid to local communities to build hospitals as part of a broad health program including Government cooperation with the medical profession in a plan for patients to pay medical expenses on a "budget plan."

Greater assistance to the aged, blind and other groups receiving public assistance.

Free lunches for all school children.

WAR TO PEACE ECONOMY

Guarantee every man released from armed forces or war plants a job with "fair pay and working conditions."

Continue rationing and other wartime restrictions so long as necessary.

Give labor "responsibility in organization and sharing in management."

Consolidation of railroads into a limited number of regional systems.

Government-private partnership in some plants and facilities with Government deciding what concerns should be left operating in such fields as aircraft, shipbuilding, aluminum and magnesium.

House Votes Lend-Lease Extension

Republicans Fail in Plan to Give Congress Last Word on Payment

By Alex H. Singleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

A year's extension of the Lend-Lease Act was voted overwhelmingly by the House yesterday after it blocked a Republican-sponsored attempt to seize for Congress the final say on what this Nation will seek as payment for its wartime aid.

The 407-to-6 House vote sent the bill to the Senate, whose Foreign Relations Committee yesterday unanimously approved a companion measure—but with a warning that the Senate expects major postwar economic agreements to be submitted to it as treaties. "We don't recognize the authority of the lend-lease organization to make commitments binding the United States as to postwar economic policy," Chairman Connally (Democrat) of Texas said.

Administration Victory

House approval of the extension came just a few minutes after rejection of a rider which might have had, in months and years to come, a far-reaching effect on foreign policy.

Defeat of the rider—a major victory for the Administration—came on a tellers' vote of 178 to 118. It was accomplished with the virtually solid support of the Democratic majority, plus more than a score of Republicans, among them Representative Eaton of New Jersey, ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Early Vegetables Far Below Hopes

Yields of six early vegetable crops are running far below expectations and food program goals, a Department of Agriculture report showed yesterday.

The figures on asparagus, cabbage, cauliflower, celery and strawberries dealt a blow at the Nation's hopes of accenting fresh vegetables and fruits to make up for rationing of canned goods.

Government Units Report $89,906; Total Now $410,073

District Red Cross campaign heads yesterday heard the most encouraging news thus far in their metropolitan area drive for $1,535,400 when Government division chairmen reported $89,906, thus boosting the total collected so far to $410,073.

Meeting for the third in a series of "box lunch" gatherings in the Chamber of Commerce Building at 1615 H Street Northwest, workers also heard Lieut. J. J. De Angelis, one of the survivors of 21 days spent in lifeboats in the Pacific with Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, tell of his own experiences with the Red Cross from Hawaii to Australia.

Typical of reports from Government agencies was that of Col. David Barry of the Marine Corps, who said contributions from the Naval Medical Hospital at Bethesda, Md., were $3200, far in excess of its $1750 quota, and that the Bureau of Aeronautics gave $7755 with a goal of $6215.

Maj. A. W. Renwick of the adjutant general's office of the War Department said that "one-fifth of

New York, March 10 (AP).—Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's physicians today ordered curtailment of her transcontinental tour as it was learned that her husband, the Chinese generalissimo, had cabled advising his wife not to overstrain herself.

Her doctors, after an hour and a half with her today, issued a statement that her heavy program of activities to date had "decreased her narrow margin of reserve strength" and it was essential that she curtail as well as postpone the trip, which was scheduled to start this weekend.

Thrice previously Mme. Chiang suffered spells of faintness.

Stand on Heads to Jog Brains, Girls Told at Career Clinic

If 1200 Government girls are discovered with their heads on the floor and their feet hooked on the backs of chairs today, it is not because the war effort has gone to their brains.

Blame it all on the third session of the Navy Department's career clinic, sponsored by Mademoiselle magazine at the Department of Interior auditorium last night.

This strange position is an old gravity defier to give the cerebrum a chance to enjoy a little blood circulation once or twice a day—so said Ann Delafield, widely known director of a famed beauty salon's success school.

"When you are on your feet most of the day, gravity pulls the blood away from the upper part of your body and hence you grow older from the waist up than you do from the waist down," said Miss Delafield (costume: black dress with draped skirt, hat and veil of deep red roses, wide fur scarf with rose corsage).

"Hence this 401-degree position that I call 'the beauty angle' is a better pick-up when you're tired than two cocktails. Remember,

Withholding Tax Passed In House Unit

Wage Earner Could Settle Up 1942 Bill By June 15, Then Start Pay-as-You Go

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

A compromise tax plan giving individuals their present option to get on a "pay-as-you-go" footing in their income tax payments by doubling up, plus a special discount for doing so, and making wage and salary earners pay income taxes as they now pay Victory taxes, won a 16-9 vote of approval in the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday.

House Republican Leader Martin promptly summoned members of his party to confer Monday on strategy for defeating the committee plan, and substituting the Beardsley Ruml plan for establishing a pay-as-you-go system by writing off a full year of income liability for all individuals. The plan is embodied in a bill by Representative Carlson (Republican) of Kansas, backed by 9 of the 10 Republican Ways and Means members.

No Option on Withholding

The major apparent choice given to the taxpayer under the committee plan would be whether to pay half of his tax on 1942 income by June 15—as he must do now by present law—or whether to pay all of his tax on 1942 income by that date—a choice which present law now gives him.

If the wage and salary earner chose to pay only the first half of his tax debt on 1942 income by the middle of the year, a 20 per cent withholding deduction to be applied after July 1 would go to settle the remainder of his 1942 debt.

If he paid his 1942 debt off in full by June 15, the amount withheld from his earnings after July 1, would go to settle tax on 1943 income.

No option would be given to the individual about submitting to the withholding levy—it would be mandatory for those whose wages or salary exceeded basic exemptions.

Same Remain As Now

Of the withholding rate on the taxable part of salaries and wages, 20 per cent, 3 per cent would go to collect Victory taxes, and 17 per cent to collect income levies. The 3 per cent would apply to earnings over $624 a year; the 17 per cent would apply to income over $550 for single persons, $1320 for married, plus $385 for each dependent.

Those whose income came mostly from sources other than wages and salaries would remain on the present system, but there was talk of offering some inducement through a special discount to them, as well as wage and salary earners, to get farther ahead in their tax payments.

Still Want Ruml Plan

The question of how large might be the discount for inducing individuals to pay their present income taxes in full early in the year was left for another Ways and Means meeting tomorrow, along with other perplexing wrinkles in the proposed collection system.

The question of whether there will be any Federal tax "forgiveness" to help individuals make a transition to "pay-as-you-go" status was saved for a showdown fight when the legislation reaches the floor, and Minority Leader Mar-

Montgomery's Men Harass Rommel As Preliminary to Tunisia Showdown

By Harold V. Boyle
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, March 10.—Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British Eighth Army began testing Marshall Erwin Rommel's crippled tank forces today preliminary to a Tunisian showdown in which Montgomery promised to give the enemy a "bloody nose" now that he is "caught like a rat in a trap."

Rommel was on the defensive behind his Mareth Line on southern Tunisia. He had lost 52 more precious tanks in vainly lashing out against Montgomery over the weekend, and now was feeling the rising counterstrength of the Eighth Army which was probing and harassing for a blow expected to roll back the Axis into a tighter pocket in central Tunisia.

French troops were menacing Rommel's western flank between Tozeur and Gafsa, and Allied pressure also was exerted on the Axis lines of Col. Gen. Jurgen von Arnim in the north.

A "Bloody Nose"

Before Rommel's six attacks collapsed last Saturday against the Eighth Army, General Montgomery sent the following message to his troops:

"1. The enemy is now advancing to attack us. This is because he is caught like a rat in a trap and he is hitting out in every direction trying to gain time to stave off the day of final defeat in North Africa.

"2. This is the very opportunity we want. Not only are we well-equipped with everything we need, but in addition the soldiers of the Eighth Army have a fighting spirit and morale which right now is on the top line.

"3. We will stand and fight the enemy in our present positions. There must be NO WITHDRAWAL anywhere and, of course, NO SURRENDER.

"The enemy has never yet succeeded in any attack against a coordinate defensive layout and he will not do so now. We have plenty of tanks, provided defended localities hold firm. Then we will smash the enemy attack and cause him such casualties that it will cripple him; we will in fact give him a very 'Bloody nose.'

Our Turn To Attack

"4. IT WILL THEN BE OUR TURN TO ATTACK HIM. And having been crippled himself he will be unable to stand up to our attack and we will smash right through him.

5. This attack of the enemy therefore really helps us and is one more step forward toward the end of the war in North Africa. I did not expect for one moment the enemy would attack us; it seemed absurd. But he has done it and we must show our gratitude in no uncertain way.

"6. Let us show him what the famous Eighth Army can do.

"7. Good luck to each of you and good hunting."

Thus the Allied squeeze play on the cornered Axis troops holding the eastern end of Tunisia

M'Arthur's Air Chief in D. C.; More Planes May Be Object

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Lieut. Gen. George C. Kenney, brilliant commander of the Allied air forces in the Southwest Pacific, has arrived in Washington at the head of a mission of seven officers serving under Gen. Douglas MacArthur, The Washington Post learned last night.

The extraordinary visit—it wast just a week ago that General Kenney's airmen scored their "100 per cent victory" over a Japanese convoy of 22 ships in the Battle of the Bismarck Sea—was not explained.

Their arrival coincided with reports from the Southwest Pacific of the opportunity for a "real offensive" against Japan if sufficient planes were available.

That may be the purpose of their visit, to plead with the powers that be in Washington to give MacArthur what he needs to smash at Rabaul, the Jap's great New Britain neval base, and from there head for his avowed goal, the Philippines.

With Gen. Kenney on the flight from New Guinea to Washington was Maj. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, MacArthur's oft-decorated chief of staff. Gen. Sutherland, who broke through the Japanese lines from Bataan with MacArthur just about a year ago, has his home here at the Kennedy-Warren.

The journey to Washington of these two officers and other members of the Southwest Pacific command recalled the statement made by General MacArthur on January 24, after he had defeated the Japanese at Sanananda, thus ending the campaign in Papua.

General MacArthur told then of the tremendous part played by the airplane in this vicinity, and went on to say:

"A new form of campaign was tested which points the way to the ultimate defeat of the enemy in the Pacific.

"The offensive and defensive power of the air and the adaptability, range and capacity of its transport in an effective combination with ground forces represent tactical and strategical elements of a broadened conception of warfare that will permit the application of

Taft Hints Current Draft Rate May Be Speeded Up

By William T. Peacock
Associated Press Staff Writer

A hint that the current rate of draft inductions may be speeded up came yesterday in a statement from Charles P. Taft, assistant director of the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services, that all 3-A registrants may be inducted by midsummer.

When Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission disclosed last month that the induction rate was 12,000 a day it was indicated the 3-A class, composed of men 18 to 38 with dependents, would not be exhausted before the latter part of the year.

Taft's estimate, based on "what the selective service people told me," was given a Senate Appropriations Committee last week.

It was reported to the Senate yesterday as that body debated proposals for deferment of farm workers coincident with these developments elsewhere on the labor and manpower situation:

Nazis Complain As British Rake Munich

Churches, Hospitals, Cultural Monuments Hit, Germans Claim

By the Associated Press

London, March 10.—The R. A. F. struck explosives and fire deep into the heart of Nazidom for the second straight night with a 500-ton blockbuster and incendiary attack delivered by big bombers on Munich last night and followed it up this afternoon with extensive fighter sweeps over France.

The Berlin and Paris radios went off the air at 9:30 p. m. tonight, indicating the R. A. F. was again smashing at objectives on the continent.

Of the raid on Munich, as in the aftermath of the Monday night attack on Nurnberg, the British spoke only of industrial targets while the Germans officially omitted mention of them and stressed instead the damage done to "cultural" objects and to civilian accommodations.

"During the night," the German communique said, 'the British air force attacked Munich. The population had losses. Considerable damage was done to dwelling quarters, several hospitals and churches and cultural monuments."

The German radio reported the Glyptothek, Pinakothek and Shack art galleries, all clustered within 800 yards of the Munich central railway station, were destroyed, and British observers said that

Scores of Towns Fall to Soviets; Foe Loses 35 Tanks In Ukraine Area

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), March 11. Russian troops captured Bely and scores of other towns yesterday in a smashing central-front drive to knock out Smolensk, 80 miles away, while in the south Moscow said today the Germans had lost 800 more men and 35 tanks in attacks which collapsed against new Red army defenses below Kharkov.

The Russians also punched new holes in Nazi positions below Lake Ilmen on the front northwest of Moscow, capturing several more localities on the approaches to Staraya Russa, Nazi Sixteenth Army Headquarters, a midnight bulletin disclosed.

German recovery of approximately 100 miles of strategic territory around Kharkov, admitted by Moscow Tuesday night, had threatened to overshadow the continuing Red Army successes on the central front, but the latest bulletin indicated the Russians now were holding firm in the Ukraine.

South and southwest of Kharkov, said the communique, recorded by the Soviet monitor, "our troops repulsed fierce attacks of enemy tanks and infantry."

3 Drives Peril Vyazma

The capture of Bely on the central front put the Russians 70 miles northwest of Vyazma in a further flanking of that most exposed Nazi eastern position. Vyazma itself was imperiled by Russian columns driving close to the town from the east and north.

The midnight bulletin said these latter columns had "overwhelmed the enemy's defenses" and captured scores of hamlets on the approaches to Vyazma.

Russian advances in this area made it likely that the Germans soon would abandon Vyazma. Before the Russians announced the seizure of Bely yesterday in a special communique Berlin already had acknowledged its loss, saying it was evacuated "according to plan."

Bely is 180 miles due west of Moscow, and the Soviets' ultimate goal on this front is Smolensk, Nazi central front keystone 230 miles west of the Soviet capital.

15 Miles From Staraya Russa

Sixteen tanks, 12 guns, an ammunition dump and an undisclosed number of prisoners fell to the Russians plunging south and westward on the central front, and the capture of Bely put the Red army only 20 miles above Nikitinka whence a rail spur leads down to the Vyazma-Smolensk Railway at the rear of Vyazma.

Marshal Timoshenko's driving forces to the northwest were reported within 15 miles of Staraya

'3 Basic Weaknesses'

Truman Committee Warns U.S. Of 'Toughest, Grimmest Year'

By Francis J. Kelly
Associated Press Staff Writer

The Truman Committee told Americans yesterday to brace themselves for the "toughest and grimmest" year and attributed shortcomings in the Nation's war effort to "three basic weaknesses" which it said are now being corrected.

Those weaknesses, the committee's second annual report declared, are:

1. "Inadequate over-all planning within Government agencies at the beginning of various programs, and delay in determining basic policies necessary to carry out such programs effectively.

2. "Conflicting authority over, and responsibility for, various phases of the war program, resulting in delays and buck-passing.

3. "Hesitancy of Government to adopt unpopular or unpleasant policies long after the facts clearly indicated such policies were necessary."

The committee, headed by Senator Truman (Democrat) of Missouri and known formally as the Special Senate Committee Investigating the War Program, expressed

Somervell Warns Army Supply Heads

Orders Personnel To Stop Bickering, Help Win the War

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Personnel of the Services of Supply, military and civilian, were warned yesterday by Lieut. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, commanding the SOS, to ignore attacks, avoid bickering with other agencies and dedicate themselves to winning the war.

The War Department has been repeatedly criticized publicly by officials of other Government agencies for its procurement and manpower policies, both of which are under jurisdiction of the SOS At the same time General Somervell said, in answer to a question, that relations with the War Production Board are "quite satisfactory."

Some observers had professed to see in the recent ouster of Ferdinand Eberstadt as vice chairman of the WPB in charge of materials as a direct thrust at the War Department, whose man Eberstadt was reputed to have been.

Somervell said he had "not the slightest doubt that other agencies of the Government will meet us half way" in his effort to end interdepartmental strife. The SOS, he said, is "not engaged in any strife and is not going to get into any."

The SOS chief revealed his instructions to personnel of his branch at a press conference which he said was a "report to the public" on the accomplishments of the SOS during its first year of existence. The service was organized a year ago yesterday when the cumbersome organization of the War Department was shelved in favor of a streamlined program which brought all its activitie under three commands — Ground Forces, Air Forces and Service of Supply.

Somervell revealed also that the designation of his command would be changed within a few days to "Army Service Forces."

With reference to production for military needs he said the SOS will back its "controlled materials plan" to the fullest and that "recent changes in the WPB have not affected this picture, and I am convinced we can count on its cooperation."

"You can take this as my pledge to support CMP up to the hilt," he said. "That's the system we've got now and that's the system I want to see made to work. I think, in the main, industry feels the same way about CMP."

Above all, Somervell emphasized his warning against being drawn into squabbles with civilian agencies with which the SOS must work and with other branches of the Army.

"We must not fall into pitfalls of empire building and jurisdictional jealousies," he declared. "Much of our work throws us in contact with other agencies, our Allies, the Navy, civilian bureaus and departments, other branches of the War Department. Our relations with these are the best. * * *"

Accomplishments Listed

In his "report to the public", Somervell listed a long series of accomplishments by the S. O. S. in its year of existence. Among these were:

Procurement of 17 billion dollars worth of supplies and equipment without permitting the urge for increased production to prevent development of new and better weapons, with the result that many important weapons have been brought into production, including a new medium tank, several self-propelled guns and "radio for previously unknown uses".

Induction, classification and assignment of more than 4 million men.

Feeding, clothing and housing these men and caring for their health.

Construction of 6 billion dollars worth of military facilities.

Moving more than one million men and 14 million tons of supplies overseas and handled "millions of domestic movements."

Setting up and making function an administrative organization for the largest American Army in history.

He was preceded by Undersecretary of War Patterson, who said the S. O. S. had performed its function during its first year under Somervell's direction with "marked ability." He expressed himself as "proud of its record."

War Sidelights

Hero Saves Crippled Ship From Nazis

London, March 10 (By Cable).—In the darkness of a tiny steel tunnel below the waterline of his freighter, a British chief engineer recently kept bomb-damaged machinery going for 72 hours until the cargo-laden ship arrived in convoy at a Russian port. He is Ernest Wardman of Stockton-on-Tess and his heroic vigil was described here today when he was awarded the O. B. E. (Officer of the Order of the British Empire).

A near miss by a German bomb severely damaged the main bearing of the ship's propeller shaft, threatening to bring the vessel to a standstill and make it easy prey for Nazi planes. Continuous oiling would keep the bearing functioning.

Wardman kept it going. For three days and nights he crouched in the cramped tunnel, just above the vessel's keel, which houses the bearing. Dark, reeking with oil, the shaft was just wide enough to allow the bearing sufficient play. Falling asleep, even for an instant, meant dropping on to the whirling machinery and being ground to death.

Refusing relief, Wardman stuck to his post. To ward off fatigue, he exercised as much as the cramped quarters permitted.

Nazi Plane Threat

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—Expanding on recent vague German threats of reprisal raids on America, the Rome radio described at length the new German Heinkel-177 bombers, which it said "can carry more than a 6-ton cargo and are able, without any difficulty, to reach New York, bomb the city and return to their bases."

The broadcast, apparently intended for American ears, was recorded by C. B. S. The Italian announcer said the new German planes were being produced "on a large scale."

Extension Voted For Lend-Lease

The six Republicans who voted against extending the act until July, 1944, were Representatives Crawford, Hoffman and Woodruff of Michigan and Jones, Smith and Brehm of Ohio.

The rider to give Congress veto powers over final settlement of lend-lease benefits was proposed by Representative Vorys (Republican) of Ohio with the contention that it would "set up the machinery for teamwork" by the executive and legislative branches of Government on postwar problems.

Its defeat apparently discouraged other attempts to tack riders onto the bill. Several members who planned to offer amendments dropped those plans after the test tally on the Vorys proposal.

One, however, took an alternative tack. Representative Fish (Republican) of New York later introduced a separate resolution to write into the lend-lease agreements the terms of the Atlantic Charter.

In advancing his proposal, Vory's expressed concern that, under the master agreement on lend-lease between this Government and foreign countries, the final authority on the form of the settlement now is left in the hands of the President.

Expressing belief that power could be used to shape economic and foreign policy directly affecting American domestic life, he asserted that "in our republic, the executive has vast powers and responsibility to plan and negotiate for peace, but the people's representatives must pass upon post-war plans."

Representative Eberharter (Democrat) of Pennsylvania, like Vorys a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, argued that the rider would "hamstring" the State Department and interfere with speedy prosecution of the war.

abolish agencies like the National Resources Planning Board were the real spendthrifts.

He said that the board, by making plans for unemployment and other postwar problems, would save the Nation billions of dollars.

Some members of Congress quickly retorted that they too favored postwar planning, but were opposed to any more "superboondoggling."

In a message forwarded to Congress with the two reports, President Roosevelt said they were designed to "assist" Congress in the development of legislation for a postwar America. He said, in part:

"We can all agree on our objectives and in our common determination that work, fair pay and social security after the war is won must be firmly established for the people of the United States of America.

"Men in the armed forces and all those engaged in the war effort rightly expect us to be considering their future welfare.

Although the long-range objectives of the Social Security Plan presented to Congress by the President yesterday are the same as those of the British Beveridge report, there are several salient differences in tradition and geography.

Dr. Eveline M. Burns, who directed research on the report for the National Resources Planning Board, listed the programs for public assurance of work and for youth as the main points which the Beveridge Plan fails to mention.

(The Beveridge Plan is a British proposal for extension of social security and has been under discussion in Parliament.)

The NRPB parallels the Beveridge report because "it has a long-range point of view and it is intended to inform people and challenge complacency," Dr. Burns said. It is not based upon the English study, however, since it was begun in 1939 and completed last year, before the British social security scheme was published.

The specific work assurance programs recommended in the NRPB report would be along the lines of the NYA, CCC, WPA, and similar public works projects, Dr. Burns explained.

Workers who had exhausted their limit of 26 weeks of unemployment insurance and no longer were eligible for insurance, as well as unemployed youth, would benefit under the work program. In England, these people would be cared for under direct public assistance, or the dole.

This provision means that the American plan aims farther than the British, Dr. Burns said. At the same time "in some ways we have farther to go towards our goal than they do," she said.

The points covered by the Beveridge plan which are not mentioned by the NRPB report are:

1. Maternity benefits.
2. Payments to cover the cost of rearing children.
3. Payments to cover funeral expenses.

Dr. Burns, who was born in Britain, came to the United States in 1926 on a fellowship awarded her while she was teaching at the London School of Economics. Later she became an American citizen.

Until 1942 she was a member of the graduate faculty of Columbia University, although she spent the year of Hitler's rise to power studying unemployment relief policies in Germany and made a similar study of Britain in 1937.

Police Broadcast Alarm For Missing British Boy

New York, March 10, (AP)—An eight-state alarm was broadcast by police today for John Charles Tanner, missing 12-year-old son of Major Robert Tanner, a member of the British Purchasing Commission.

The boy, who disappeared Monday morning, wrote a letter from Pittsburgh to his mother, police said. He is four feet, eleven inches tall, weights 85 pounds, and was wearing a gray flannel suit and navy blue coat when he left home.

U. S. Airmen's 7 Hits Wreck Burma Bridge

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, India, March 10.—United States fighters, carrying light bombs and machineguns, yesterday resumed extensive attacks against Japanese installations in northern Burma, an American communique announced today.

Seven direct hits were scored on a bridge at Mogaung, cutting the north approach and leaving the center span sagging, and the town of Mogaung itself was showered with fragmentation bombs.

Enemy landing fields at Kamaing and Manywet were strafed.

A fire was started at Maingkwan and bombs were dropped on railroad installations at Monywa and factory buildings at Myingyan. No American aircraft were lost.

American-built Liberator bombers of the R. A. F. attacked the Japanese base at Prome in central Burma last night, hammering at railway yards for more than half an hour and leaving large fires burning in the target area, a British communique announced.

The raid followed a series of daylight attacks on Japanese positions in the Kanzauk area northeast of Rathedaung on the Mayu Peninsula in western Burma. Troop concentrations, gun positions and a factory near Akyab were strafed by fighters, the bulletin said.

All R. A. F. planes returned safely.

Chinese Successes

Chungking, March 10 (AP).—A Chinese high command communique announced today new Chinese successes in western Yunnan Province, in southwestern China adjacent to Japanese-occupied Burma, but said the Japanese had scored gains in Hupeh Province.

In Hupeh the invaders on Monday night forced a crossing of the Yangtze River from the north. Today's bulletin said they continued to push southward from points west of Shasi and northwest of Yochow, "despite substantial losses."

In western Yunnan, west of the Salween River, it said the Chinese had captured Chaikungtang, Kiangchuchieh and other points.

It said the Japanese were suffering heavy losses and were retreating in confusion toward Tengchung.

New Blows Dealt Jap Shipping As Allies Damage 2 Vessels

By Murlin Spencer
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Thursday), March 11—Allied heavy bombers dealt punishing new blows to the Japanese merchant marine yesterday over a wide area of the southwest Pacific, attacking five merchantmen and heavily damaging two of them, the high command reported today.

Liberators and Flying Fortresses ranging from the Celebes to Wewak in northern New Guinea probably destroyed a 7000-ton enemy ship at Bontong Island off the southeast end of the Celebes.

Two other ships near Boeroe Island were bombed, but results were not observed.

At Wewak, Fortresses sailed over two vessels in the harbor and one of 5000 tons was smoking heavily when the bombers left.

Still another ship, a coastal vessel, was strafed near Regota Sermata Island in the Tanimbar Island group.

All raiders returned safely to base.

Meanwhile, grim evidence of the Bismarck Sea battle was observed north of Goodenough Island and off New Guinea.

Floating rafts and lifeboats carrying dead Japanese moved slowly along on the two-mile-an-hour current which flows toward Goodenough—all that remained of the 22-ship Japanese convoy shattered and sunk by Allied airpower.

Nazis Making New Transport Plane

London, (Thursday), March 11 (AP).—The Germans are producing a new six-engined troop transport plane capable of carrying 130 men, it was disclosed today.

It is called the power glider "ME-323" and is being manufactured by the Messerschmitt Co. The ME-323 is a monoplane equipped with six French Rhome-Rhone 14-M radial engines arranged abreast along the leading edge of the wing. Built into the bottom of the nose is a multi-wheeled undercarriage for aiding in landing on rough terrain.

War Risk Rates Drop

London, March 10 (AP).—The Institute of London Underwriters today announced world-wide reductions in war risk rates for ship cargoes in a move which appeared to mark a definite turn for the better in the Allied war against Axis submarines.

The cuts were most marked in the American section of the rate list where cargoes via the Panama Canal and Pacific Ocean to India, Ceylon and the Persian Gulf were chopped from 20 per cent of the value of the shipment to 15 per cent.

Cardinal Hinsley Weaker

London, March 10 (AP).—The condition of Arthur Cardinal Hinsley, stricken February 27 with a heart attack, grew worse today and is causing "considerable anxiety," a bulletin issued by his physicians said. He was reported weaker.

German Convoy Fights British; Nazis Claim U-Boat Toll of 23

By the Associated Press

A sea battle off the Dutch coast between British coastal vessels and a German convoy was reported yesterday (Wednesday) while the Germans claimed that their submarines in the last five days had sunk 23 Allied vessels in actions from the North Atlantic to the Cape of Good Hope.

From Paramaribo, Dutch Guinea, a dispatch to the Netherlands News Agency Aneta reported that "several Allied ships—possibly eight—have been sunk by enemy action near the coast of French Guiana," and that 30 survivors were landed at Paramaribo Wednesday morning.

In the battle off the Dutch coast, the British declared they scored two torpedo hits on a tanker, damaged one enemy patrol craft, and left another burning. The Germans countered by saying they had sunk three British motor torpedo boats and set fire to two more, and admitted no losses themselves.

"Gunfire from our forces inflicted considerable damage on the enemy escort," the Admiralty added.

The German high command said the 23 freighters it claimed sunk in the last five days totaled 134,000 tons, and that 6 other ships had been torpedoed by German submarines. This claim was not substatiated by any Allied quarters.

But in London during the day United States Shipping Board announced that 66 survivors of a torpedoed United States freighter had been landed at a British port.

Pay Increase Quiz Gives U. S. Control Data

The Government will have the data needed to enforce wage and salary controls for the first time when income tax returns are in, it was learned yesterday.

All personal tax returns contain the following question:

"Was the rate of your salary or wages increased or decreased after October 3, 1942 and before the end of your taxable year?"

In formal income tax instructions employers are advised not to deduct as exepense any wage or salary payment made in violation of stabilization regulations of the Treasury and War Labor Board, in accordance with provisions of the October 2 Anti-inflation Act.

The two types of information (from wage earners and employers) can be checked against each other and against Treasury and War Labor Board wage and salary stabilization decisions, giving an indication of compliance with the regulations.

Treasury officials refused to state what use would be made of this information, merely stating, "Give us a chance to look at the returns first."

It was pointed out that the original regulations were given wide publicity and employers generally warned that they would not be allowed to claim tax exemption credit for wages and salaries paid in violation of the regulations.

Statements made in the income tax returns are entered under the express understanding that "penalties of perjury" will apply to false statements.

Meanwhile, the War Labor Board defined the extent of its jurisdiction over overtime rates of pay. War Labor Board approval is not required for an employer to pay time and a half overtime rates if the payment is made in accordance with the provisions of the Wage-Hour law, or other similar Federal, State, or local laws, or under provisions of a collective bargaining agreement or in accordance with past practices of an employer.

However, WLB approval must be asked, if no law or other specified provision applies. Such employers may pay overtime at straight time rates without asking special permission of WLB.

The overtime pay question has become particularly pressing since the War Manpower Commission ordered a 48-hour week instituted in 32 labor shortage areas including the District.

Earlier, the Philadelphia Regional War Labor Board which has jurisdiction over District wage cases disclosed that it had processed 161 wage cases during the week ending March 5. Proposed wage increases were disapproved in 53 cases.

Battered Munda Again Raided By U. S. Bombers

Japanese installations at Munda on New Georgia Island, already bombed at least 85 times, were raided twice Tuesday (Solomons time) by bombers from Guadalcanal, the Navy Department reported yesterday.

Text of the communique, No. 305:

"South Pacific: (All dates are East Longitude)

"1. During the night of March 7-8, a Japanese plane dropped bombs on United States positions on Guadalcanal Island. No casualties resulted.

"2. On March 9:

"(a) During the morning, Liberator heavy bombers (Consolidated) dropped bombs in the enemy areas at Kahili and Ballale in the Shortland Island area and at Munda and Vila in the central Solomons. Results were not observed. All United States planes returned.

"(b) Later in the morning, a large force of Dauntless dive-bombers (Douglas) and Avenger torpedo bombers (Grumman TBF), with Wildcat escort (Grumman F4F), attacked the airfield at Munda on New Georgia Island. Hits on supply dumps and anti-aircraft positions started large fires. All United States planes returned."

83 Days on a Raft

1. Wary of a possible trap, a U. S. patrol boat approaches cautiously to find three ragged, starved men on an 8x10-foot raft floated on two empty oil drums. The only American, 21-year-old Basil Dominic Izzi of South Barry, Mass., an armed guard crew member, feebly hails the oncoming patrol craft, the first seen by the trio since the thirty-fifth day of their 83 days adrift. Izzi's companions, both Hollanders, were Cornelius van der Slot, Rotterdam, and Nick Hoogendam, Vlaardingen. Two other Americans died on the raft and were buried at sea by their companions

2. On the deck of the patrol boat, the survivors of the astounding sea saga try their first solid food. Previously the trio had been given a special diet of dextrose, saline and sodium bicarbonate to prepare them for their return to normal diet. Left to right—Van der Slot, 37; Hoogendam, 17, and Izzi, 21. Kneeling beside them is Raymond C. Buckley, first class pharmacist's mate on the patrol boat, who was commended for his care of the men and advanced to a chief's rating. The men, survivors of a ship sunk off the Brazilian coast by a Nazi submarine, had lived on raw fish and fowl which they caught from time to time offensive power in swift, massive strokes rather than the dilatory and costly island-to-island advance that some have assumed to be necessary in a theater where the enemy's far-flung strongholds are dispersed throughout a vast expanse of archipelagos."

President Roosevelt must have been much impressed because he later proclaimed that the idea of inching up on Japan island-by-island had no place in American strategy.

The astounding victory of General Kenney's fliers in the Battle of the Bismarck Sea gave some idea of what MacArthur was talking about when he mentioned "swift, massive strokes." However, this was essentially a defensive stroke, delivered to thwart the Japanese in their efforts to reinforce their garrisons in northern New Guinea.

War correspondents in that area warned that the wiping out of the Japanese convoy, with a loss of some 15,000 Jap troops, did not mean that MacArthur had any great preponderance of aircraft. The victory, they reported, was due to General Kenney's tactics, to the superiority of his planes and fliers, and to a highly efficient method of supply and repairs.

Would Like "More Stuff"

One high-ranking American officer in that theater of war was quoted by Barry Faris, of the International News Service, as saying, "God, how I would like to have a little more stuff—just enough to really give those fellows a blasting."

Asked what he meant by a "little more," the officer said:

"I'll tell you. I mean the equivalent of just two days' production of planes throughout the United States a month. That's about 7 percent of our total output. Give us 7 percent each month . . . and I guarantee that we can blast a path right through to Tokyo."

Rabaul, which MacArthur is so eager to capture, is Japan's most important base in that part of the world.

There are usually about 70 Jap ships in the harbor. From Rabaul the Japs supply their bases in the Solomons. Just north of Rabaul, in the mandated islands, lies Truk, a favorite rendeavous for the Japanese Fleet.

Rabaul also is the goal of the Navy. This was made clear when Vice Admiral Ghormley opened an offensive against the southern Solomons last August.

Subcontract Facts Sought

Col. Robert W. Johnson, chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, yesterday bluntly put the armed services and the Maritime Commission "on the spot" by asking them in an open letter to tell him by April 7 the extent to which 252 large corporations holding the "preponderance" of war contracts have subcontracted to smaller concerns.

Johnson, who was brought into the War Production Board to do a more vigorous job for small business, stated in the letter that he would transmit the information so provided in his bi-monthly report to Congress due on April 11.

As of November

The list of 252 companies held war contracts totaling almost $67,400,000,000 last November, it was revealed. Sixteen of them held contracts totaling more than one billion dollars each. The two smallest on the list were concerns with which Johnson himself was connected in private life. They were the Johnson & Johnson Co. with contracts totaling $14,400,000 and the Kendall Co. holding 11 million dollars' worth of contracts. Both outfits make surgical supplies.

In his letter sent jointly to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of Navy Frank Knox, and Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission, Johnson, who once headed the New York ordnance district for the War Department, made it clear that he was dissatisfied with the subcontracting job done thus far.

Johnson said that a joint memorandum signed by Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson, Undersecretary of Navy James V. Forrestal, and War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson, and sent out to war contractors last December failed to get "any effective response."

Readily Obtainable

"I am aware that some of the services have succeeded in getting some prime contractors to spread the work," Johnson wrote, "and that some contractors have set up adequate reporting systems so that information requested will be readily obtainable.

"Others, I feel certain, are not doing so well," he added significantly.

Johnson said he made the request under a "mandate" in the Smaller War Plants Act to "inquire in regard to the extent and terms upon which prime contractors with the Government have let subcontracts," and to "take appropriate action to bring about subcontracting upon fair and equitable terms in the greatest volume practicable."

He asked the services to supply him the number and dollar volume of prime and subcontractors, the methods used by corporations to increase subcontracting, and methods used to insure that subcontracting is done in fair and equitable ways. In taking office recently, Johnson indicated that he hopes to place 25 to 35 billion dollars worth of war orders in the hands of small businesses.

More Than Half-Billion

Plants listed by Johnson with more than a half-billion dollars worth of war orders as of last November follow: (total dollar volume of contracts are in millions of dollars.)

your only source of nourishment is your blood stream."

Many defense factories in which she has made speeches have adopted the idea, Miss Delafield declared, and have arranged chairs and pillows in lounges so that girl workers may do a few minutes of beauty-angling.

"Diet is important because you are nothing but what you eat," she said. "You must consume enough alkaline ash foods—fruits, vegetables, milk—to counteract the acids—cocktails, hors d'ouvres, seafood, cereals, sweets.

"Also, the way you feel creates alkaline or acids. Love, courage, peace, happiness, optimism and play are on the alkaline side, while hate, fear, worry, sorrow, pessimism, tension and overwork make acids."

As for exercises, she scorned the old bend-over-and-touch-the-floor with-your-finger's routine. And a brunette named Miss Fisher, clad in blue halter and black satin shorts, was there to demonstrate the way to abolish bumpy hips—the "tango" movement of lying flat on the floor and swinging the right leg all the way to the left side and vice versa; and "double-hips hooray" of slapping legs viciously on the floor from side to side.

Miss Delafield also produced in person half a dozen successful graduates of her 6-weeks beauty course, with pictures showing the "before" versions.

"Rationing makes Uncle Sam the most powerful beautician in the world," she said. "Now you will have to eat the things that are good for you—precisely the things that I have been preaching for 15 years."

What does a girl require to make herself into a new woman?

"Just a sense of humor and guts," said Miss Delafield firmly. "She can do it in 20 minutes a day."

Kay Long, Midwest editor of Mademoiselle (clad in navy blue suit with red bow at waist, navy open-toed shoes, small four-cornered hat trimmed with clusters of buttons), presided.

Other guest speaker was Bernice Peck, Mademoiselle's beauty editor, who recommends having a "work basket" at the office containing cleansing cream, foundation cream, white comb, tissues, nail brush, hand cream, skin freshener, nail polish, adhesive tape, mirror, powder, dental floss, toothbrush, lipstick, shoebrush, cologne, mascara, aspirin, vitamin pills, sewing kit, soap, and powder puffs.

The career clinic ends tomorrow night with a session devoted to fashions, with Hat Designer Lilly Dache as guest speaker.

Beauty Safeguarded

The War Production Board yesterday promised American women that they can remain beautiful despite the war and its resultant shortages of labor, materials and transportation.

In a survey of the war's effects on the $800,000,000 beauty industry, WPB reported prospects of adequate supplies of powder, lipstick and cream.

supreme confidence in victory despite the mistakes which have been made.

"There has been great improvement in the past year, particularly in recent months, in the correction of the three basic weaknesses," it said.

No group in the Nation is solely responsible for the weaknesses, the report said, continuing:

"Various sectors of the public have been guilty along with Government . . . .

Some Labor Hoarded

"Some contractors have hoarded labor and pyramided costs. Many of the huge corporations which obtained the bulk of war contracts were slow to spread subcontracts among smaller concerns. The latter in many instances were hesitant to convert their plants to war production and seek war contracts as long as peacetime goods could profitably be made.

"The great labor organizations have done an excellent job in eliminating work stoppages . . . however, it must be pointed out that the campaign to reduce absenteeism has not accomplished much. Many organizations have been slow to relinquish peacetime 'featherbed' and other rules that cut production, and have not hesitated to press for inflationary wage increases in the face of their own long view welfare and the national interest.

"Farmers produced food magnificently under handicaps in 1942. Greater production will be required in 1943.

"Prices of all commodities including both labor and farm prices must be controlled if inflationary spirals with consequent disasters are to be avoided. The committee does not believe that leaders who advocate policies which would result in uncontrolled inflation correctly represent the views of the rank and file of either labor or farmers."

Bickering Deplored

The committee declared that selfish "me first" attitudes, and bickering and struggles for power within the Government, must give way before a patriotic determination to place the winning of the war above all else.

Calling for harder work, longer hours and greater sacrifices, the committee predicted that "America can and will accomplish the tremendous task set for her this year."

The committee saw as one of the primary needs of the year the centralization of authority in a few officials. Hinting perhaps at a war cabinet, the report said that "in addition to doing their administrative work, they should meet frequently to eliminate all conflicts of jurisdiction and be ready to advise with the President on important questions of policy while relieving him completely of purely administrative work."

The report applauded the centering of materials allocation in Charles E. Wilson, vice chairman of the War Production Board, as "a long step toward eliminating one of the worst organizational faults of the war setup."

In like manner, it called the announcement of inflation control policies by Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes "an outstanding example of the firm determination of basic policies by Government, even in the face of opposition from powerful groups."

"More such examples are urgently needed in the year ahead," it added.

Miss Mae Schnurr's report from the Department of Interior showed that one division had subscribed 236 per cent and another 139 per cent over their goals.

"In just two hours of solicitation some of our units have exceeded their quotas by 25 or 30 per cent," said Grover B. Hill, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. "I have no over-all report to make to you today, but I can say that we have discovered a wonderful spirit and are sure the drive will go over. This time there are no alibis for not giving."

Jesse C. Watts, reporting for the Department of Labor, announced that 48 per cent of that bureau's goal already has been collected, a total of $2479. From the War Production Board came word that 4011 contributions have totaled $18,070. Fred S. Fraser of the Veteran's Administration said his division has received $5161.60 to date.

W. P. Bartell's report from the Interstate Commerce Commission stated that $1100 had been turned in by the end of business on Tuesday. From Frank Bergfeld of the Treasury came the announcement that "under the staggered payroll system we have held off soliciting until today, so that after tomorrow we expect a most encouraging report."

Comdr. W. F. Loventhal of the Navy Department said 7897 donors have given $23,043.76, or 41 per cent of the Navy quota. George F. Busby of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation stated that three contributors gave $500 and that 100 others have totaled more than $1000. Frank Sanderson reported 41 contributions for $525 from the White House.

WE ANNOUNCE "FLYING HORSEPOWER"

Now—in addition to the Famous Houdry Catalytic Cracking Process—Socony-Vacuum Announces a 2nd and 3rd Revolutionary Advance in Petroleum Chemistry.

These Remarkable Processes will produce More and Better Aviation Gasoline for America's Fighting Planes. We call it FLYING HORSEPOWER.

The Present Octane Yardstick cannot measure the Full Power of These Great New Super-Fuels.

Each of the Three Processes Has Been Made Available to the United States Government and to the Entire Petroleum Industry. Socony-Vacuum Will Employ All Three—The SOCONY-VACUUM PROCESS FOR MANUFACTURING FLYING HORSEPOWER

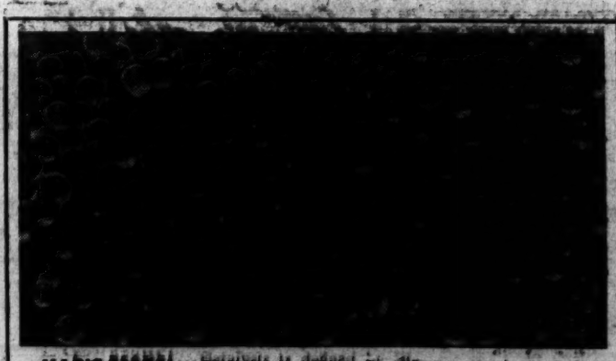
1 After bringing Eugene Houdry to this country, Socony-Vacuum pioneered with him the development of the Houdry catalytic refining process. We were the first company to produce 100-Octane gasoline in commercial quantities by catalytic methods. From this beginning has stemmed most catalytic refining, the only method by which 100-Octane aviation gasoline can be produced in the vast quantities needed by the United Nations' air fleets. Socony-Vacuum has produced up to now more catalytic cracked base stock for 100-Octane gasoline than any other company.

2 Today, the T.C.C. Process (Thermofor Catalytic Cracking), Socony-Vacuum's second great contribution in the refining of vital aviation fuels, is being installed in 18 American refining units (5 of them ours). The T.C.C. Process permits continuous catalytic refining, improves the quality and increases the quantity of 100-octane base stocks. It requires less critical materials—steel and alloys—than any other catalytic process.

3 Close on the heels of the T.C.C. Process comes Socony-Vacuum's third revolutionary scientific discovery, the Synthetic Bead Catalyst, described in the picture here. For many years, 100-Octane (which means without knock) has been the standard of gasoline performance. 100-Octane has been a synonym for perfect. Now, Socony-Vacuum's sensational Bead Catalyst makes possible the production, in commercial quantities, of a new and better gasoline—far more powerful than any present 100-Octane gasoline—so powerful that it can be greatly diluted for use as an ingredient in 100-Octane gasoline. Even thus diluted, this remarkable fuel will give to aircraft a new, quick maneuverability, speed, climbing power, and carrying capacity.

Present aviation engines cannot make full use of its undiluted power. It opens wide the gates of invention for the airplane and the motor car of tomorrow.

Socony-Vacuum's Synthetic Bead Catalyst for producing super gasolines—is being made available by license to the entire petroleum industry.



MAGIC BEADS!... Catalysis is defined by Webster as "a chemical change effected in a compound by an agent that itself remains stable." Socony-Vacuum's revolutionary new catalyst is a porous bead . . . looks much like a pearl, is iridescent in its original form. The gasoline cracking stock passes in a continuous stream through the porous beads, undergoes a remarkable chemical change, assumes octane and power values unknown before.

Lewis Asks $8 Daily Mine Minimum

Demands $2 a Day Wage Increase At Coal Conference

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—A basic increase of $2 a day for all bituminous coal miners, with a minimum of $8 a day without exception, and unionization of all employes below the rank of superintendent were demanded formally today by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

Lewis, dominant figure in the opening session of the Appalachian joint wage conference at the Biltmore Hotel, declared "Those demands are not exhorbitant; they are modest and they are conservative."

The inside basic date rate, under the present contract which expires March 31, is $7 a day.

The requested increase, Lewis said, would help the miners meet increased costs of living which, he said had been in the case of food essentials, 124.6 per cent. Lewis charged that the "Government is creating inflation" and that the Office of Price Administration "isn't preventing inflation."

Asks Double for Sunday

Among other demands outlined by Lewis in a suggested one-year contract were double time for Sunday work, elimination of differentials between districts, elimination of third-shift mining and end to the six-day week with the end of the war emergency.

He also asked "portal to portal" starting and quitting times—that is, giving miners credit for all time at the job.

Speaking of the War Labor Board, Lewis said, "Mr. Davis (William H. Davis, WLB chairman) has a long knife out waiting for the United Mine Workers of America."

He charged Davis, on the other hand, had made a "deal" with the A. F. of L. building trades wage stabilization board which, he said, was filled with "labor zombies."

Hopes for Quick Agreement

Lewis said:

"I hope we can come to an agreement quickly, without loss of operating time, without loss of profit, or without a loss of production of coal for a Nation at war."

Lewis' demand for a minimum wage of $8 a day "without exception" would wipe out so-called "substandard" wages that had run as low as $5.15 a day, for such jobs as slate pickers, performed by boys or old men. This group would get, if Lewis, scale were followed, increases of $2.85. A minimum of $8 a day would compare with a basic day rate of $7 under the agreement which has been in effect, although Lewis specified an increase of $2 for all classifications of inside and outside day men, with proportionate rises for monthly paid men and those in piecework categories.

"When the mine workers children cry for bread they cannot be satisfied with a "Little Steel formula," Lewis said.

Freshmen's Party Free Of 'Hazing'

By Robert De Vore

Post Staff Writer

More than 100 freshmen members of Congress trooped happily out of the White House shortly after 10 o'clock last night, buoyed by President Roosevelt's bright optimism for victory and regaled by his wife and his soft drinks and beer.

In a new Administration move for peace and harmony on Capitol Hill, they were summoned to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue for the first White House party for new legislators in a decade, half expecting to hear from the President legislative proposals for the Seventy-Eighth Congress.

What they received was a general outline of the progress of the war, a rosy view of the future, a first-hand account of the President's trip to Casablanca and an hour and a half exposure to famed Roosevelt charm and wit.

Winning Combination

The combination seemed to enrapture them.

Said Representative Furlong, freshman Democrat from Pennsylvania: "My own father couldn't have treated me better, and the President was just as nice to Republicans as he was to Democrats."

Said Representative Luce, Republican Congresswoman from Connecticut, whose letter of acceptance was a public criticism of some war agencies: "It was a delightful evening."

Asked if the President said anything to her, Mrs. Luce replied: "He said good evening, just like he did to everyone else. We had no other conversation."

The President was reported, however, to have conversed at length with another woman member of the House, Representative Stanley (Republican) of New York.

In Receiving Line

Democratic Congressional leaders who advised the President to give the freshmen a party in the hope that the result would be improved understanding between the Administration and new legislators, stood in the receiving line with minority chiefs in both Houses.

After being introduced to the President in the main dining room by the leaders and Vice President Wallace, the freshmen found places at tables or sat in a horseshoe of chairs in front of the President. Mr. Roosevelt did most of the talking, although occasionaly a Congressman would ask a "polite" question.

Peak in 2 Years

From a discussion of attrition against Japan, some gained the impression that Mr. Roosevelt considered the war with Japan would last at least two more years. He told them, they said, that the present rate of attrition against Japan would reach a peak in two years.

There were others, however, who said they thought these remarks concerned a purely theoretical basis of attrition which would be changed as the United Nations brought more force to bear in the Pacific theater.

Speaker Rayburn, who acted as a sort of master of ceremonies, said the party was "purely social," while the Vice President described it as:

"A nice party—everything sweetness. Nobody threw any bricks."

New Jersey Opposition to Ship Canal Voiced

By the Associated Press

J. Spencer Smith, president of the New Jersey Board of Commerce and Navigation, told a House Committee yesterday that the State was against putting up the money to buy the right of way for a trans-State ship canal.

It would be futile, Smith said, for Congress to pass a bill by House Majority Leader McCormack of Massachusetts authorizing expenditure of 187 million dollars to dig the channel and so provide the missing link in the Atlantic intracoastal waterway system.

The canal, from Bordentown on the Delaware River to Sayreville on the Raritan River, was advocated as a solution to New England's fuel oil shortage and condemned as a "yachtsmen's paradise."

Smith, who testified before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, conceded that the State has provided for acquisition of land for the waterway in the past, but that it now is opposed to appropriating funds for this purpose.

Samuel Ferster, member of the North Jersey District Water Supply Commission, said proponents of the canal are "pulling out a cat and dog under the guise of national defense."

Army Engineers who favored the project before the committee yesterday, Ferster said, had opposed it as late as last year.

"The shipping interests," he asserted, "want the canal and want Uncle Sam to pay the bill."

Manpower is unavailable to dig the canal, he said, and land costs are considerably higher than in 1936.

Declaring that construction of the canal would endanger the State's potable water supply, Ferster said "it is a question of drinking water or water for a ditch."

Smith said the canal question has not been put up to the people of the State, but that sentiment now is against furnishing the money.

supreme confidence in victory despite the mistakes which have been made.

"There has been great improvement in the past year, particularly in recent months, in the correction of the three basic weaknesses," it said.

No group in the Nation is solely responsible for the weaknesses, the report said, continuing:

Some Labor Hoarded

"Some contractors have hoarded labor and pyramided costs. Many of the huge corporations which obtained the bulk of war contracts were slow to spread subcontracts among smaller concerns. The latter in many instances were hesitant to convert their plants to war production and seek war contracts as long as peacetime goods could profitably be made.

"The great labor organizations have done an excellent job in eliminating work stoppages . . . however, it must be pointed out that the campaign to reduce absenteeism has not accomplished much. Many organizations have been slow to relinquish peacetime 'featherbed' and other rules that cut production, and have not hesitated to press for inflationary wage increases in the face of their own long view welfare and the national interest.

"I hope we can come to an agreement quickly, without loss of operating time, without loss of profit, or without a loss of production of coal for a Nation at war."

Lewis' demand for a minimum wage of $8 a day "without exception" would wipe out so-called "substandard" wages that had run as low as $5.15 a day, for such jobs as slate pickers, performed by boys or old men. This group would get, if Lewis, scale were followed, increases of $2.85. A minimum of $8 a day would compare with a basic day rate of $7 under the agreement which has been in effect, although Lewis specified an increase of $2 for all classifications of inside and outside day men, with proportionate rises for monthly paid men and those in piecework categories.

"When the mine workers children cry for bread they cannot be satisfied with a "Little Steel formula," Lewis said.

Freshmen's Party Free Of 'Hazing'

By Robert De Vore

Post Staff Writer

More than 100 freshmen members of Congress trooped happily out of the White House shortly after 10 o'clock last night, buoyed by President Rooosevelt's bright optimism for victory and regaled by his wife and his soft drinks and beer.

In a new Administration move for peace and harmony on Capitol Hill, they were summoned to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue for the first White House party for new legislators in a decade, half expecting to hear from the President legislative proposals for the Seventy-Eighth Congress.

What they received was a general outline of the progress of the war, a rosy view of the future, a first-hand account of the President's trip to Casablanca and an hour and a half exposure to famed Roosevelt charm and wit.

Winning Combination

The combination seemed to enrapture them.

Said Representative Furlong, freshman Democrat from Pennsylvania: "My own father couldn't have treated me better, and the President was just as nice to Republicans as he was to Democrats."

Said Representative Luce, Republican Congresswoman from Connecticut, whose letter of acceptance was a public criticism of some war agencies: "It was a delightful evening."

Asked if the President said anything to her, Mrs. Luce replied: "He said good evening, just like he did to everyone else. We had no other conversation."

The President was reported, however, to have conversed at length with another woman member of the House, Representative Stanley (Republican) of New York.

In Receiving Line

Democratic Congressional leaders who advised the President to give the freshmen a party in the hope that the result would be improved understanding between the Administration and new legislators, stood in the receiving line with minority chiefs in both Houses.

After being introduced to the President in the main dining room by the leaders and Vice President Wallace, the freshmen found places at tables or sat in a horseshoe of chairs in front of the President. Mr. Roosevelt did most of the talking, although occasionaly a Congressman would ask a "polite" question.

Peak in 2 Years

From a discussion of attrition against Japan, some gained the impression that Mr. Roosevelt considered the war with Japan would last at least two more years. He told them, they said, that the present rate of attrition against Japan would reach a peak in two years.

There were others, however, who said they thought these remarks concerned a purely theoretical basis of attrition which would be changed as the United Nations brought more force to bear in the Pacific theater.

Speaker Rayburn, who acted as a sort of master of ceremonies, said the party was "purely social," while the Vice President described it as:

"A nice party—everything sweetness. Nobody threw any bricks."

New Jersey Opposition to Ship Canal Voiced

By the Associated Press

J. Spencer Smith, president of the New Jersey Board of Commerce and Navigation, told a House Committee yesterday that the State was against putting up the money to buy the right of way for a trans-State ship canal.

It would be futile, Smith said, for Congress to pass a bill by House Majority Leader McCormack of Massachusetts authorizing expenditure of 187 million dollars to dig the channel and so provide the missing link in the Atlantic intracoastal waterway system.

The canal, from Bordentown on the Delaware River to Sayreville on the Raritan River, was advocated as a solution to New England's fuel oil shortage and condemned as a "yachtsmen's paradise."

Smith, who testified before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, conceded that the State has provided for acquisition of land for the waterway in the past, but that it now is opposed to appropriating funds for this purpose.

Samuel Ferster, member of the North Jersey District Water Supply Commission, said proponents of the canal are "pulling out a cat and dog under the guise of national defense."

Army Engineers who favored the project before the committee yesterday, Ferster said, had opposed it as late as last year.

"The shipping interests," he asserted, "want the canal and want Uncle Sam to pay the bill."

Manpower is unavailable to dig the canal, he said, and land costs are considerably higher than in 1936.

Declaring that construction of the canal would endanger the State's potable water supply, Ferster said "it is a question of drinking water or water for a ditch."

Smith said the canal question has not been put up to the people of the State, but that sentiment now is against furnishing the money.

Text of Resources Planning Board's Postwar Social Program

The findings and recommendations of the National Resources Planning Board on security, work and relief policies follow:

We have given our reasons for believing that the adoption of certain policies and the application of certain financial and administrative principles would result in a more nearly adequate, well-rounded, and orderly system of public-aid measures. In summarizing these proposals, we wish again to emphasize that, precisely because we have attempted to develop a well-coordinated and consistent body of policies and principles, no one of our specific recommendations can be considered apart from the whole system of which it is an integral part.

In this context, and for the reasons we have given in the preceding pages, we therefore are making the following recommendations:

I. In Public Aid Problem

The American people should base public-aid policy upon the acceptance of the following facts:

1. The need for public aid will be both large and persistent for some time to come.

2. The need for public aid is in large measure caused by serious maladjustments in the operation of our economy and by personal physical or psychological defects, many of which can be remedied.

3. The social problem created by economic insecurity is manysided and requires for its solution a series of diversified programs.

II. Broad Objective of Public Aid

The overall objective of public aid should be the assurance of access to minimum security for all our people, wherever they may reside, and the maintenance of the social stability and values threatened when people lack jobs or income.

III. Specific Objectives

The specific objectives of public-aid policy should be:

1. Increasing emphasis upon policies aiming at the prevention of economic insecurity through a fuller utilization of our productive resources, including labor, and by more comprehensive measures to improve the health of our people.

2. Government provision of work for all adults who are willing and able to work, if private industry is unable to provide employment.

3. Appropriate measures to equip young persons beyond the compulsory school-attendance age for assuming the full responsibilities of citizenship.

4. Assurance of basic minimum security through social insurance, so far as possible.

5. Establishment of a comprehensive underpinning general public-assistance system providing aid on the basis of need, to complete the framework of protection against economic insecurity.

6. Expansion of social services which are essential for the health, welfare and efficiency of the whole population; this expansion should be as wide and as rapid as possible.

IV. Finance and Administration

The following financial and administrative principles should be consistently applied in all public-aid programs:

1. The financing of public aid should be provided for as a normal and continuing function of Government in a revised and reorganized fiscal system.

2. Public-aid financing, even if treated on a compartmentalized basis, should be coordinated with the broader economic and monetary policies of Government.

3. Reliance of consumption and earmarked taxes should in general be avoided.

4. A distribution of financial responsibility for total public-aids costs between the various units of Government is advisable and should reflect differences in need and in economic and fiscal capacity.

5. The objectives of the various special programs should be clearly stated and distinguishable, and the beneficiaries of each should be those, and only those, for whom the specific program is appropriate.

6. Although Federal-State cooperation is preferable as a general principle, the allocation of administrative responsibility for the various diversified programs between Federal, State and local governments should be determined by reference to:

(a) The capacity of the different Governmental units for the exercise of specific financial, policy-forming, technical, and routine administrative functions; and

(b) The national importance attached to the attainment of the objectives of the given program.

Joint Programs

7. In jointly administered programs special attentions should be paid to defining as logically and clearly as possible the respective responsibilities of the participating governments and to developing techniques for cooperative action.

8. The advantages of administrative decentralization should be explored to the full, especially through a more constructive development of the regional basis of organization.

9. The personnel administering public-aid programs should be fully qualified by training and experience for the performance of tasks which call for a high degree of skill and professional competence.

10. Citizen participation in policy formation and program operation should be encouraged wherever this is consistent with sound and impartial administration.

V. Specific Programs

The existing programs should be modified in the light of these policies and principles in the following ways:

1. Federal work programs.

(a) To carry out the principle that work should be provided for all adults willing and able to work, a Federal work agency charged with responsibility for developing and operating work programs should be established on a permanent basis. The organization should operate with a high degree of flexibility.

In developing appropriate projects, the organization should work in close contact with the public works programming division of the National Resources Planning Board, the Bureau of Employment Security of the Social Security Board and appropriate technical agencies, and with State and local public works and welfare administrations. State and local governments should be encouraged to intensify the efforts now made to develop long-range public works planning with a view to maximizing the amount of work given during periods of economic depression. It is recognized that the types and volume of public works which will lend themselves to such programming will change from time to time. Increasing attention should, however, be paid to planning for nonconstruction work and service activities.

(b) The character of the work performed should be adapted to the developing needs of the Nation and of communities for both construction and nonconstruction work, including social services. It should also reflect the occupational characteristics and geographical distributions of the unemployed and the probable future needs of the economy for workers with specific skills and occupational experience. Necessarily the programs must be flexible and highly diversified.

Performance Standards

(c) The standards of performance demanded of project workers should be those normally required in private industry and should be strictly enforced.

(d) Rates of remuneration, conditions of employment, and hours of work should parallel as closely as possible those prevailing in private employment. Where, however, the work projects are primarily used as an instrument for training or retraining, suitable training grants should be paid in lieu of wages.

(e) Eligibility for employment on work programs should be restricted to persons normally dependent upon full-time employment and those who are not entitled to receive unemployment compensation benefits, or whose unemployment is likely to persist for an extended period of time. Persons undergoing short spells of unemployment and partially unemployed workers should not normally be assigned to work-project employment. Special work projects, limited in duration, should be devised for farmers and agricultural workers during slack seasons.

(f) Eligibility for employment should be determined by relative employability and need for work. Access to the program should not be dependent upon undergoing an investigation of economic need. Adequate appropriations for a work program and a general public assistance system would make such a test unnecessary.

Registration Plan

(g) All persons seeking work should be required to register at public employment offices and access to the work program should be through the employment office.

(h) Major responsibility for the operation of work programs should remain with the Federal Government, although every effort should be made further to develop cooperative relationships with the States and localities.

(i) Major financial responsibility should be carried by the Federal Government. In sponsored programs the share which sponsors are required to contribute should reflect the fiscal capacity of the sponsor.

2. Programs for youth:

(a) Federal financial aid is needed, to assure educational opportunity for all young people above the age of compulsory school attendance who desire and can benefit by continued schooling, should take the form of educational grants. These grants should be distributed by the educational authorities and, in determining payments to be made to families under public-aid programs, no part of the payments made to enable youth to continue schooling should be treated as part of the resources of the family.

Work Experience

(b) The curricula of the schools should be revised so as to provide that all young people obtain meaningful unpaid work experience in the school or in community service during the period of school attendance.

(c) Apprenticeship should be recognized as an appropriate channel for the occupational adjustment of youth.

(d) Young people who are not in full-time attendance at schools or institutions of higher learning or who are not in private employment should be provided with productive work for a wage. The character of work and the wages paid should reflect the inexperience of the young workers. Both resident and nonresident types of programs are desirable. Special stress should be placed upon the educational aspects of the work and upon the inculcation of work habits and disciplines and familiarity with the use of a variety of tools. The hours of work and relating training should be the equivalent of full-time work. Close relations should be maintained between the educational authorities responsible for related training and the administrators of the youth work programs.

(e) All young people seeking public work should be required to register at public employment offices, and they should be referred to the various special programs by this service. Access to the youth work programs should not be limited to young people in economic need.

Eligibility Defined

(f) Eligibility for the youth work programs should be ordinarily restricted to persons under 21 years of age unless it can be shown that, because of the absence of public provisions, they have not had access to special youth programs or have not had adequate work experience through private employment prior to reaching this age.

(g) Facilities for counseling and guidance should be made available to all young people and their parents. The actual counseling should be performed by the schools and the public employment service. The employment service, through a special youth service unit, should act as the local coordinating body.

(h) All youth programs should devote special attention to the physical health of youth, and financial provision should be made accordingly.

(i) The youth work programs should be financed and administered on a national basis, and the present CCC and NYA out-of-school work programs should be combined in a unified administration. Local sponsorship of work projects should be encouraged so long as this is consistent with the development of work projects appropriate to the needs of youth.

3—Work programs for the handicapped

Further study should be given to the development of therapeutic work programs for those with special physical and mental handicaps and disabilities.

4. The social insurances.

(a) Disability insurance.

The existing proctection against economic insecurity through social-insurance measures should be expanded by the development of a system of social insurance to provide at least partial compensation for loss of income attributable to permanent or temporary disability.

(b) Unemployment compensation.

The unemployment compensation system should be strengthened and expanded in the following ways:

(a) Coverage should be extended to embrace seamen and employes of nonprofit corporations and of firms employing one worker or more. The inclusion of workers in domestic, agricultural, and other low-paid employments should be considered in relation to the patterns of employment, the character and amount of their earnings, and the feasibility of devising a benefit formula which will yield them significant payments. Consideration might be given to the desirability of developing a separate system with its own eligibility, benefit, and contribution provisions for agricultural workers.

Benefits for 26 Weeks

(b) The duration of benefits should be extended to 26 weeks and should be uniform for all eligible workers.

(c) The benefit formulas should be reconsidered with a view to assuring benefits which will enable the vast majority of recipients to maintain themselves for a period up to 26 weeks without recourse to supplementary payments under other forms of public aid. The payment of dependents' allowances would be a first step in this direction.

(d) Eligibility rules should be revised so as to admit to insurance benefits only workers whose past earnings and employment records offer a presumption that they will draw significant benefits from the system and yet not such amounts as to induce them to prefer benefit status to self-support. The adoption of duration of past employment in place of previous earnings as a criterion of eligibility should be explored.

(e) Experience rating should be abandoned. If experience rating is retained, minimum Federal standards relating to eligibility, duration and amount of benefit are essential.

Peacetime Program Stresses Need for Adequate Medical Care

(f) The present Federal-State system should be replaced by a wholly Federal administrative organization.

(g) There should be a single national unemployment compensation fund, part of which should be drawn from general tax sources. If, however, the system is not placed upon a national basis, a reinsurance system accompanied by Federal standards relating to eligibility, duration and amount of benefit should be developed.

C. Old-age and survivors insurance:

The old-age and survivors insurance system should be strengthened and made more widely available by the following changes:

(a) Coverage should be extended to employes of nonprofit corporations. Additional groups of employes should be covered as rapidly as it can be demonstrated that they will receive adequate or significant benefits from the system.

Formula Revision

(b) Continuing study should be given to the feasibility of revising the benefit formulas and the minimum-earnings eligibility requirement, with a view to making it possible for the vast majority of covered workers to qualify for benefits and to enabling the system to offer significant monthly benefits to a larger proportion of the low-paid and irregularly employed workers. Periods of involuntary unemployment, sickness and military service should not impair eligibility for any amount of benefits.

(c) The general principle of a governmental contribution to the costs of the program should be specifically embodied in legislation.

5. General public assistance.

(a) In addition to adequate work and social-insurance programs, there should be a comprehensive general public-assistance program.

(b) There should be a Federal grant-in-aid for general public assistance, which should be available on a basis reflecting differences in need and economic and fiscal capacity as between the States. The States should be required to distribute Federal and State moneys within their political subdivisions on a similar variable basis. The costs of public assistance granted to persons with less than one year's residence in a State should be a wholly Federal charge.

Single State Agency

(c) The system should be administered through a single State agency responsible for the administration or supervision of the plan. The Federal administrative agency should be the Social Security Board. Where a State refuses to comply with the Federal requirements in accordance with the Federal law or refrains from participation in the program, the Federal Government should have the power to operate the program within that State with Federal personnel until the State demonstrates its ability and willingness to reassume its responsibilities, provided:

That a public hearing should be called at which the Federal Government should show why this step is believed to be necessary and at which the State government should have an opportunity to answer the allegations; and

That the hearing should take place within the State concerned.

(d) In addition to the provisions laid down for the special types of public assistance in the Social Security Act relating to availability of aid, throughout the State, selection of staff on a merit basis, the assurance of appeal rights, and the rendering of reports to the Social Security Board, the State's plans for general public assistance should provide:

(a) That public assistance may not be denied any person by reason of race, sex, marital or employment status, or failure to have resided within the State for more than one year.

Standards Specified

(b) That public assistance should be administered in accordance with general standards adopted under rules and regulations of the Social Security Board relating to adequacy of air and methods of payment.

(c) That the same standards regarding eligibility (other than residence) and assistance given shall be applied to persons with less than one year's residence as to the remainder of public-assistance recipients.

6. Special types of public assistance.

(a) Public assistance now provided for special groups such as the needy aged and blind and dependent children should be continued with such modifications of existing provisions as are necessary to develop a more fully coordinated program. Consideration should be given to extending the categories to embrace all groups whose need for socially provided income is likely to be relatively permanent or of long and predictable duration.

(b) The greatest equal-matching Federal grant should be replaced by a grant in which the amount of the Federal contribution would take into account differences between the States in need and in economic and fiscal capacity.

(c) The States' plans should provide for a distribution of Federal and State moneys within their political subdivisions in accordance with relative need and fiscal capacity.

Payments to Mothers

(d) The Federal act providing aid to dependent children should provide specifically for payments to mothers. Grants under the aid-to-dependent-children program should be comparable in adequacy with those for the aged and the blind.

7. Public social services.

(a) Public social services essential to the health, education, and welfare of the population should be available throughout the country, especially in areas which are disadvantaged in respect to income and taxable wealth. In most communities, marked expansion of present services will be required in order to achieve these objectives. The planning and administration of public social services should be lodged in the appropriate agencies of Government and responsibility for their development should be shared by local, State, and Federal authorities. The administration should be in the hands of qualified full-time personnel selected on the basis of merit.

(b) It is essential that public provision be made for meeting the needs of our people for more adequate medical care. Toward this end the Federal Government should stimulate, assist, or undertake constructive action to provide such care for the millions of our people whose need cannot be fully met from their own resources. Such a program should include adequate provision for promoting the health of mothers and children.

(c) State and local child-welfare services for the prevention of child neglect and delinquency and for promoting adequate care of children requiring special attention should be expanded with the assistance of the Federal Government so as to be everywhere available.

(d) Free school lunches should be provided for all school children.

(e) The bulk distribution of surplus commodities should be replaced by the stamp plan, and greater efforts should be made to prevent the availability of commodities from concealing the inadequacies of general public assistance or from leading to a reversion to payment in kind. Surplus commodities should be available to the entire low-income population and not merely public-aid recipients.

8. General administrative arrangements.

(a) The merit system should be extended upward, downward, and outward for all personnel in the field of public aid. Opportunity for employment on these programs should not be restricted on the basis of residence in a particular State or locality. Greater use should be made of in-service training and staff-development programs. Interchange of staff between Federal, State, and local governments should be encouraged.

Costs Should Be Variable

(b) Appropriations for administrative costs, which directly condition the size and quality of staffs, should not take the form of a uniform percentage of the total costs of any program but should be variable, depending on the character of the job to be done.

(c) In every community there should be a central information office responsible for informing applicants of the availability of community resources, both public and private, and putting them in touch with the administrations of measures appropriate to their needs.

(d) The administration of all public-assistance programs operating within a locality should be the responsibility of a single agency, which should be the channel of access to all programs where eligibility is based upon need.

Access to Programs

(e) Access to all programs offering employment or training should be through public employment offices. The federalization of the employment service should be continued as a permanent policy. The work of the employment service in developing an intimate knowledge of the labor market, mechanisms for interstate exchange of labor, vocational guidance and counseling, as well as its activities in the administration of unemployment compensation, should be further developed. The activities of the Public Employment Service along these lines in the defense period should be incorporated into the permanent program of the agency. The employment service should be empowered to make advances to workers for the purchase of tools and the payment of fares, to give financial assistance to those incurring heavy costs due to geographical transference, and to pay training allowances to workers undergoing approved training courses.

(f) The Federal Security Agency should be given the status of an executive department, and the administrator should be given the status of a member of the Cabinet. The agency should be vested with primary and continuing responsibility for promoting and safeguarding the general welfare, health and education of the people. Continuing study should be given to the basis of organization of the agency and to its relationship to other agencies administering related public-aid programs.

National Advisory Body

(g) There should be established a permanent national advisory body charged with the function of studying and advising the President, the Congress, and the country on the over-all operation of public-aid policies and programs.

(h) Similar advisory bodies, composed of representatives of public and private agencies and of the public, should be established at the State level, charged with the function of investigating State and local needs for public aid in relation to existing community resources, both public and private.

(i) Greater efforts should be made to bridge the gap between administrators and the public by increased efforts on the part of public agencies to inform the public of the purposes, achievements, and limitations of public-aid programs; by citizen participation in policy-making and in appropriate phases of administration; and by more effective use of the cooperation of private welfare agencies which have a necessary part to play in this enlarged conception of public welfare service.

(j) All public-aid programs involving Federal participation should include Puerto Rico and the island possessions, except where constitutional provisions forbid.

Leesburg-Rosslyn Rail Service Is Postponed

Revival of service on the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, between Leesburg and Rosslyn, Va., will be delayed until sometime between March 20 and 26, a spokesman for the Office of Defense Transportation announced yesterday.

The service was scheduled to be resumed yesterday but a motor burned out on the train shortly after it had left the Pennsylvania Railroad shops at Wilmington, Del., on Tuesday, which necessitated its being returned to the shop for repairs.

It will require 10 days to secure the needed parts, railroad officials said, and several days to install them. The train was rented from the Pennsylvania Railroad and is a two-car affair. It will make two round trips daily.

The Office of Defense Transportation was largely instrumental in securing the train for service here. The W. & O. D. had been ordered to resume service last year but was unable to comply with the demand because they had no train.

New Market, Va., March 10.—Mrs. A. B. French has been chosen as chief observer for the Army observation tower which is to be erected here within the town limits by the town of New Market. The tower will be "manned" by the women's clubs of this town.

Nazis Complain As British Rake Munich

probably meant that the station was smashed, too.

The University State Theater and the famous twin-spired Frauenkirche were other landmarks listed by the Germans as victims of the R. A. F.

The German radio tonight bitterly denounced the R. A. F.

"After having destroyed historic monuments of Luebeck, Rostock, Muenster and other towns of northern and western Germany, the British air force now is endeavoring to destroy also the famous architectural landmarks of the cities of southern Germany whose beauty has been admired by tourists from all parts of the world, including numerous Britishers," the German radio said.

"The British . . . deliberately attacked and destroyed beautiful medieval buildings in the central part of Nurnberg . . .

"The British night raid on Munich Tuesday night likewise was not directed against any military or war-important objectives, but exclusively against art monuments and the civilian population of the city."

A returning pilot said one fiery jet seemed to rise from oil or gasoline tanks in the railway yards which serve as a junction for trunk lines running to Italy, Vienna, Berlin and Strasbourg.

The antiaircraft fire was not so great as an previous raids, the pilots said, but some serious opposition was put up by fighters, during which a Junkers 88 and a Messerschmitt 109 were shot down.

One Canadian pilot reported the center of Munich was merged at one time into one big fire and that a single explosion shot flames up nearly 2000 feet.

"We could have read a newspaper in our kite and we were 20,000 feet up," said another Canadian.

Nazi Papers Wail At 'Air Terror'

Stockholm, March 10 (AP).—German papers have declared the war has entered a phase of desperate hardness, and that only the greatest effort of will can help German people through the "air terror" which was called a new British weapon "since the blockade failed."

For military reasons, said these reports picked up by Swedish correspondents, Germany cannot hit back hard enough just now.

British 8th Tests Rommel's Forces

appeared to be under way.

By seizing Toseur, French troops narrowed Rommel's maneuvering room northwest of the Mareth Line. The French were moving above Chott Djerid (salt lake) toward Gafsa, 50 miles to the northeast.

"We knew we had won the first round last Saturday and the enemy is showing no willingness to come up for round two," an Allied military source commented today. "We know he has lost more armor than he can afford."

Allied patrols also were "extremely active" in northern Tunisia where the British First Army is stationed, particularly in the Sedjenane area, a high command communique said.

In the area between these sectors United States troops had recovered most of the ground lost recently to Rommel before the latter switched suddenly to the south against Montgomery's poised troops.

A resumption of the increasingly effective Allied air offensive awaited only clearing skies. The weather had confined that arm to patrol duty, and the only sign of enemy air activity was in the Mareth Line sector where attempted attacks by Axis fighter-bombers were driven off.

An official announcement said another large Axis merchantman in the convoy attacked by American bombers between Sicily and Tunisia three days ago had been destroyed, raising the total to three vessels sunk and four set on fire.

(The R. A. F. hit three places in Sicily—Palermo, Agrigento and Licata—causing fires, a Cairo communique said.)

More Nazis Reported Slain in France

London, March 10.—Fighting French headquarters declared today that "hundreds" of Germans have been killed in attacks by Frenchmen protesting the Nazis' conscription of labor, and one spokesman asserted the "resistance and outbreaks are mounting in France daily."

The Paris radio reported an attempt was made on the life of Marcel Deat at Neyers by a gunman who fired several shots at the pro-Nazi leader but failed to hit him.

Later the German radio reported that a machine-gunner had attempted in vain to assassinate Deat last night. The German version, placing the locale at the town of Arbouse said it was "at first assumed to have been a pistol plot but it was established later that the assassin used a machinegun, which was found nearby."

Deat was wounded in August, 1941, when Pierre Laval also was wounded and last March he stamped out a bomb thrown at him. After that there were a number of occasions when his party offices were bombed.

A policeman accompanying Deat was reported seriously injured. Paris reports said the assault had become known there only this afternoon "as persons who performed it had previously cut all telegraph and telephone wires."

The Fighting French spokesman emphasized that "there are absolutely no signs of full-scale revolution" and that the three principle underground organizations — Liberation, Combat and Franc-Tireur —still are calling only for passive resistance until the Allied invasion.

"Guerillas who are leading the rioting now are the more militant members of those organizations whose combined membership totals several million," he said. "The members of those movements have been armed from secret sources, but as yet there is no sign from our daily reports that any quantity of their arms has been brought into use."

Another spokesman called for greater resistance in a B. B. C. broadcast to France, declaring that "from Lille to Marseille, from Brest to Strasbourg, the whole French nation has risen like one man to resist the German invader.

"In Lorient and Brest hand grenades have been thrown at the Germans. Telephone cables have been cut. In La Rochelle sabotage is increasing in the railway yards. In Metz and Colmar, Alsatians are refusing to join the German army. In Paris tension has reached a peak."

A Reuters dispatch from the French frontier said 50 Germans, including 33 officers, were killed when two German troop trains collided as a result of sabotage near St. Pol on the Channel coast 30 miles northeast of Brest.

Fighting French headquarters said 29 German soldiers were killed or seriously wounded in a daylight attack by French guerillas who threw hand grenades at a Nazi column marching through a workers' district in Lyon, and that a loaded ammunition train was blown up between Valance and Vienne.

The German column was composed of young troops sent to France to replace more experienced men, the fighting French said, and they "showed signs of panic. Some tried to find shelter and others began firing wildly on the crowds. Two bystanders were killed."

Meanwhile the Vichy radio reported that 29 peasants had been sentenced at Lyon for refusing to declare their stocks of grain and cattle.

Reports of disorders also came from other occupied countries.

The Belgian News Agency reported today that seven Belgians accused of complicity in acts of violence and sabotage had been sentenced to death by a German military court at Liege.

our armed forces by next January, the figure will be closer to 15 million." He spoke to the Senate Military Committee and said he was authorized to make that statement, but did not say by whom.

Later, Downey explained to reporters that the 15 million figure included replacements of 1 million men and addition of 3 million civilian workers in the Army and Navy Departments, who, he said, would be practically interchangeable with soldiers and sailors.

2. Secretary of Labor Perkins opposed before the House Naval Committee the Johnson bill which would direct that employers report to draft boards the names of workers habitually absent from their jobs without good cause. She said she did not object to such reports, but contended they would not do anything to solve the problem of absenteeism.

3. The Senate War Investigating Committee, headed by Senator Truman (Democrat) of Missouri, put its support behind the military in the congressional controversy over the question of limiting the size of the armed forces.

"Because of the shortage of shipping and the extent of the submarine menace," it advised the senate," the committee privately urged (the military departments) that great care should be taken in determining the size of the armed forces and of the production program so that we would not find ourselves in the position of having trained men and quantities of materiel which could not be shipped abroad and used.

"The Army has assured the committee that it has borne all these considerations in mind when determining its optimum size. The committee believes that the responsibility for such decisions should be placed squarely upon the Army and that all doubts should be decided in favor of the Army when matters of such high strategy are involved."

Making public Taft's testimony the Senate Appropriations Committee approved a $2,973,000 fund to make grants to the States for the care of children of employed mothers.

Taft said war plants had found married women more stable employes than single girls, and that there was already a pressing need for nursery schools and other institutions to look after the children of working mothers. He added:

"In addition as soon as you start drafting the 3-A's—which according to what Selective Service has told me, will be pretty complete by the middle of the summer —you will have an increased number of employed women, who have husbands in the Army. Many of them won't be able to live on the same standard when they get their allowances, and they will go to work."

G.O.P. Told Smear May Be Attempted

Republicans were warned yesterday by Chairman Harrison E. Spangler of the Republican National Committee to "be on watch against the smearing tactics of the New Dealers aimed at Congress and our party leaders."

The statement was contained in the first of a series of bulletins to be sent from National Committee headquarters to party workers throughout the country as a part of the program planned by Mr. Spangler for more intensive organization during the present year leading up to the 1944 elections.

His statement mailed to party leaders said:

"The drive to petpetuate President Roosevelt in the White House, which Republicans predicted when the New Deal Party put over the third term, is now upon us. The coat-tail riders and the bureaucrats have again been turned loose to connive and scheme for the fourth term at a time when winning the war and bringing our boys home should be our first consideration.

"With this drive has come a new wave of smearing and below-the-belt attacks upon any who oppose the New Deal. What the New Deal cannot prove, it asserts; what it dares not assert, it whispers.

"We must be on watch against such attacks, meeting them in two directions: First, answer them with the truth, each in your own way, in your own community; second, make sure that they are not permitted to be picked up and circulated in our own ranks, for that is the real purpose of the smear and the whisper. It is a technique of destroying confidence in our own purposes and in the character of our leaders, local as well as national.

"On Washington's Birthday, honoring the Father of Our Country, President Roosevelt turned from quoting Scripture to imply that all who labor to correct the shortcomings of the New Deal are to be classed with Benedict Arnold, or are tools of Hitler.

"On the same evening, Vice President Wallace poured out over the air a new smear upon former President Hoover—presumably because Mr. Hoover has sought to prevent a breakdown of the Nation's food supply in the wake of ten years of misplanning by Mr. Wallace.

"Even in the war publication Victory, published by the Government of the United States through the Office of War Information, the technique is used against Republicans while a glowing picture is painted, at Government expense, of Roosevelt of America.

"The Republican Party, in its march to a national victory, welcomes the presentation of a large number of brilliant and competent Americans as candidates for the Presidency. We can be sure that each of them will have to suffer the smear machinery of the New Deal Party and its allies among radical publications turned upon them during the coming months as the White House carries forward the fourth-term program. . . ."

tin promised that the fight will be made.

The committee's decision to avoid any forgiveness or mandatory doubling up in collections, and limit the legislation largely to a collection device, brought this comment from the nine Ruml plan backers in the committee:

"The mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse."

In issuing the statement for the nine, Representative Knutson (Republican) of Minnesota, observed that the committee plan was likely to benefit "no one but the loan sharks," and might drive taxpayers farther behind in their payments than they now are. The statement also said:

"It is obvious the House will have to take the matter into its own hands."

Representative Gearhart of California, the only Republican committee member who sided with the majority in supporting the compromise plan, said that "if the committee should agree on a 10 per cent discount for cash poyments, as I think they will, I wouldn't be surprised if the response were so great as to make it unnecessary to raise the rates on the new tax bill."

Ways and Means Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Caroline said he believed a 10 per cent discount would be too high, and other committee members spoke of 5 per cent as a possible discount rate for "hurry up" income payments.

Children's Part In War Shown In Scrapbooks

The way local school children are participating in the national Schools-at-War save, serve, and conserve project are depicted in scrapbooks now on display in the board room of the Franklin Administration Building, Thirteenth and K Streets Northwest.

The display, which will continue through the week, will be followed by a much larger exhibit of the same sort at Central High School, Thirteenth and Clifton Streets Northwest, and Bundy Elementary School, 429 O Street Northwest.

Included in the scrap book exhibit is a Junior Red Cross display of articles made by the children in their annual training classes, such as lapboards, checkerboards, writing boards and so on.

Reds Stem Nazis in South, Gain in North

Russia itself after retaking Staro Ramushevo and other points.

Aside from the Russian fight to hold Kharkov's approaches the only other battle reported in the south was in the western Caucasus, where the communique said a number of additional populated places fell to the Red army striving to capture the Nazi pivot of Novorossisk on the Black Sea coast.

Berlin broadcasts acknowledged that the Russians also had reached the Sevsk area, only 20 miles from the Bryansk-Kiev railway, in a sector where the Red army is trying to cut enemy communication lines linking the central and southern fronts. Moscow did not mention this sector in its latest communique.

As for Kharkov, the Germans claimed their troops were already menacing the western outskirts.

The Germans were reported to have thrown more than 200,000 men into a tank and infantry battle raging in a semicircle west of that city.

The one great issue—whether the Nazi command would be able to retake Kharkov, the key to the whole Soviet front in this region—yet remained in doubt. Its recapture, in expert opinion here, is essential to the success of the whole German plan.

The battle line in the Russian south was swaying inconclusively in a storm of bloody fighting—with losses on both sides running very high.

Mixed Jury to Try Charge of Rape Against Saunders

A jury of eight women and four men was selected yesterday in the trial of Leonard Augustus Saunders, 41, Negro, 1755 Swann Street Northwest, charged with criminally assaulting a 17-year-old white girl who worked as a waitress in the same Connecticut Avenue restaurant where Saunders was employed as a dishwasher.

Assistant United States Attorney John W. Fihelly told the jury the Government would seek to prove that Saunders raped the girl in the vestibule of her rooming house on the night of January 28.

After the opening statements by both the defense and prosecution the jury was taken to the rooming house at 1332 Nineteenth Street Northwest where the attack is alleged to have taken place.

Saunders is reported by police to have been an intimate friend of Jarvis T. R. Catoe. Negro, who was executed for a rape-murder several weeks prior to the attack for which Saunders is now on trial. Fihelly said that the Government would ask for the death penalty.

Japs Hold 6 From This Area As Prisoners of War on Taiwan

Six Washington area men, including three colonels and a brigadier-general, were reported by the War Department yesterday to be prisoners of the Japanese. The list of internees included names of 194 personnel, 116 from the Navy and 36 from the Marine Corps.

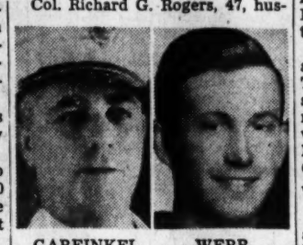
Reported captives at Taiwan were:

Col. Theodore M. Chase, 55, brother of Mrs. Robert R. Ralston of 2219 California Street Northwest.

Col. Abraham Garfinkel, 57, husband of Mrs. Bertha Klein Garfinkel of 2700 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest.

Brig. Gen. Allan C. McBride, 57, husband of Mrs. Mary Avis McBride of 2133 Tunlaw Road Northwest.

Col. Richard G. Rogers, 47, husband of Mrs. Richard G. Rogers of 813 Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills, Alexandria.



GARFINKEL WEBB

Radioman First Class Wallace Cornelius Webb, 24, son of Mrs. D. S. Breitenbach of 3603 Ninth Street South, Arlington, Va.

Private First Class Otis Hocker, U. S. M. C., son of Mrs. Albert Szathmary of Haddon Hall, Route 1, Alexandria.

Commander of the Sixteenth Coast Artillery antiaircraft unit on Corregidor, Colonel Chase and his unit have been credited with the destruction of 66 Japanese planes during the siege there.

Literally born to the Army, Chase was born in the Old Washington Barracks, now the site of the Army War College, and was intent on entering the service even as a youngster. His father was Col. Constantine Chase, Civil War veteran.

Chase attended Western High School, was graduated from West Point in 1909, and was assigned to the Coast Artillery at Fort Washington, Md. During World War I, he fought through the Meuse-Argonne offensive and was subsequently stationed at various posts in the United States and Hawaii. He returned to the District in 1932 when he attended the Army Industrial College. His wife, who died last July 27, had last heard from him in March, 1942, and no further word has come to his family. A brother, Constantine Chase, also resides in the District.

Served in Philippines

Born in New York City, Colonel Garfinkel enlisted in the Army about 1900 and participated in the Philippine Insurrection and World War I, in addition to serving as aide to the Governor's staff in the Philippines for about six years.

His wife, who has been a District resident since she was evacuated from the islands, had last direct word from her husband last April from Bataan. Indirectly, she has received recordings and letters from short-wave stations of a message from Colonel Garfinkel, broadcast from Tokyo, in January.

One such letter, from Edward T. Campbell of Beatty, Nev., reads:

"On a broadcast from Toyko there was a message from your husband. He is well and sends his love. He asks that you send light woolen underwear, razor blades, coffee and numerous other articles through the Red Cross, Geneva . . . I met your husband when he was in command of Camp John Hay. Hoping for an early victory and return of your husband."

Mrs. Garfinkel serves voluntarily at the bond booth in the Capitol Theater. Two of the Garfinkels' sons are with the Army, Capt. Bernard and First Lieut. Harold Edward Garfinkel, while a daughter, Nina, is the wife of Second Lieut. Cecil R. Page.

Winner of D. S. M.

Chief of staff in the Philippines at the time of the Jap invasion, Brigadier General McBride was last November awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for "exceptionally meritorious services to the government" on Bataan.

A field artillery specialist, General McBride was born in Frederick, Md., and was graduated from St. John's College, Annapolis, in 1908. He entered the Army that year and saw active service in France during World War I and afterward with the Army of Occupation in Germany. He had been in the Philippines since January, 1941. Last communications from General McBride were written during January, February and March, 1942, and were recovered the following August from a sunken vessel. At the time he wrote that 'we must have faith."

A son, Andrew Clay McBride, is with the coast artillery and received his second lieutenancy last September 20, just 34 years to the day after his father did.

Colonel Rogers, a native of Mount Pleasant, Tex., was attached to the quartermaster general's office here before he was sent to the Philippines in 1939. He was in charge of the commissary at Bataan. Rogers, who enlisted in 1917, was commissioned a second lieutenant the following year and served at camps throughout the country. He was stationed in Panama, 1924-27.

Born in Savannah, Ga., Webb enlisted in the Navy in March, 1936, and trained at Norfolk. He has been with the Asiatic fleet on Pacific maneuvers for the past three years.

Victory speeds out of the night
To lonely watchers it may seem just another train speeding through the night.
Just another train? Hardly! Today there's no such thing on the ROCK ISLAND LINES right-of-way. For our trains haul the products essential to victory; carry, too, the men who fight so that some day the nations of the world may be at peace.
This has been our job ever since the call "To Arms!" was sounded—and will be our job until America's foes are vanquished.
Battles are still to be fought—battles on the transportation front no less than battles on some far-distant alien shore.
But courage and resourcefulness were ever American traits. They help our fighting forces to overcome the enemy, just as they help the railroads to do the seemingly impossible in transporting vital man power and the equally vital materials of war. And of great help, too, is the splendid cooperation of patrons.
That train speeding through the night is a harbinger of the peace that is to come. Whether or not it carries the ROCK ISLAND symbol means little—all of America's railroads are united in this war-to-the-finish. We of the ROCK ISLAND are happy that we are privileged to have a part.
Victory will speed out of the night . . . into a dawn of peace.

Admiral Robert

The troubled star of Vichy may have gone into total eclipse last November when Hitler's hordes overran the so-called free zone of France. But it continues to shed a feeble light at Martinique. There the high commissioner, Admiral Georges Robert, remains completely deaf to all pleas that he join forces with the French elements now fighting the Axis. Refusing to link up either with De Gaulle or with Giraud, he continues to remain loyal to the ghost of Vichy and insists, with greater determination than ever, on abiding by the terms of the Franco-German armistice which Hitler has treated as still another scrap of paper. Robert by his actions would seem to view Hitler's great slave hunt of his fellow countrymen with the utmost complacency.

In the circumstances there was no other course open to the United States than to stop all food shipments from this country to Martinique. We had, until November, treated the incredible admiral with kid gloves. Months were spent in negotiating an agreement with him. But this tin-pot dictator would rather have the people of Martinique starve than shift his ground. Possibly they will, in due course, have something to say about that themselves. Anachronisms sometimes have their charm, but Admiral Robert, the people of Martinique are discovering, may soon be a far too expensive antique to have around. To them he has now become an unmitigated menace.

Steakless Days

The shrinkage of meat on the American table is probably the most difficult dietary change this Nation has had to take. Traditionally we are a meat-eating people, and, what is more, have prided ourselves on it. All red-blooded he-men Americans are popularly supposed to have gotten that way by eating meat—particularly rare beef. Every woman learns early in life that a sizzling steak with fried potatoes is one of the surest ways to a man's heart. Moreover, modern nutrition with its emphasis on protein calories—such as are found in meat, milk, eggs, cheese—in reducing diets has sent many a woman scurrying for a steak for herself.

The pioneer dependence on wild game and the subsequent growth of the livestock and packing industries have made the average American feel that meat at every meal is his birthright. Consequently, the proposed average ration of 1¾ pounds a week beginning next month is going to constitute an even more difficult readjustment in American life than was the putting of the family car in the garage. However, this allowance may be more meat than many Americans are getting now, unless they have fat pocketbooks or special stand-ins with their butchers. The rationing will make for a just spread of the meat available. The persons who need it the most—the physical workers and the members of the low-income group—will be assured of their shares, and the undemocratic practice of the prosperous getting their thick steaks at high-priced restaurants while the nonprosperous go without will be abolished. Housewives will not have to stand in line at meat counters and may shop late in the day without losing their meat allowances. Meat rationing also is expected to curb materially the "black markets," thus removing the menace of diseased meat.

Last year Americans consumed on an average 2.6 pounds of meat a week. This year's proposed ration is about one-third less, which is the proportion of our meat supply that will be taken by the Government for war purposes. The British ration is only 14 ounces a week, and the British state of health is better than formerly. Poultry and fresh fish are not included in the meat rationing, and this country is expected to have slightly more than its normal quota of chickens this year. The use of fish probably will become more widespread. It is safe to say there will be enough meat or its substitutes to keep everybody healthy and strong—yes, even red-blooded and virile—if the principles of nutrition are practiced with ingenuity. The biggest hurdle that Americans will have to take in meat rationing is the psychological one. The change of food habits is more upsetting emotionally than physically. But this is a small sacrifice to ask of such a strong people as we former meat eaters admit ourselves to be.

Russia's Problem

Vice President Wallace will have done a service if he encourages people to think through the issues which must be solved as the condition precedent of a just and durable peace. But his Monday effort to put the problem of Russia in plain terms left something to be desired. The trouble lay in Mr. Wallace's terminology.

Stalin's Russia was made to appear as the embodiment of Marxism, or anticapitalism. In point of fact, there is very little left of Marxism beyond lip service in Soviet practice. The dictatorship of the proletariat has been transformed into the dictatorship of one man, Josef Stalin. His word is law throughout the whole of the vast Russian domain. So permeated are the Russian people with Stalin that virtually every Russian—certainly every Russian in contact with foreigners—is an extension of the Stalin personality. That is to say, the Russians not only mold their conduct on Stalin; they actually adopt his words as the subject matter of their everyday conversation. Marxism is not even used as a guide in economic Russia. In place of being rewarded on the basis of need, Russians are paid on the basis of skill, placework being the rule in modern Russia. Wendell L. Willkie on his return from Russia spoke of men working side by side at a bench who received such unequal wages that one man might earn twice as much as his neighbor. The disparity between the white-collar class and the workers is even more marked than the disparities within the worker class. An engineer could earn ten times as much as the most highly skilled workman. In no country, in other words, are the capitalist virtues of skill, enterprise, and incentive rewarded more than in Russia. So that while we agree that an understanding with Russia is fundamental to a just and durable peace, the bases of agreement have little to do with our accommodation of the nonexistent Marxism of Stalin's Russia.

What we do have to accommodate in the peace are the new nationalist aspirations of the Kremlin which are now expressed in Pan-Slavism. Nowhere in the Wallace speech is there any recognition of this difficulty. Yet if the American people were polled, we have no doubt that they would see the problem in these terms.

On the one hand, they are told—and, if Governor Stassen is any guide, are convinced—that we can win the peace only by setting up a world organization. On the other, they see evidence in the Kremlin of a sharpened and expanded nationalism. It is expressed in claims which already have been put out informally for territories in the Baltic and the Balkans. Is this evidence of a new imperialism to take the place of the old? Is the demand limited only to the territories having predominantly Slav populations? Is it only an effort to surround Russia with such a safety belt that never again will there be any danger of an invasion of Russia? These are the questions that arise from the peace aims which already seem to have been staked out in the mind of the man in the Kremlin. They have nothing to do with economic terminology.

It would be foolish to suppose that the problem is insoluble. For the problem has its roots in Russia's lack of faith in other nations. There can be no doubt that, as Mr. Wallace said, many of the "Marxian" activities of the last 10 years have been inspired by fear of Germany, though he might have added of the other great powers as well.

What Stalin thus requires is and always has been security. It was a quest for security that made him the most ardent advocate at Geneva of collective security. Mr. Litvinoff in his behalf pleaded time after time for recognition of the concept that peace is one and indivisible. If it were broken anywhere, the problem was the concern of all nations. This was the theory of the League of Nations. But Russia saw in one case after another that the theory was more honored in the breach than the observance. Then came the pact with the Nazi aggressor at Munich. When that event occurred—accompanied as it was by the undisguised hope in many high quarters that Germany would liquidate its war spirit at the expense of Russia—the Kremlin had reason to feel double-crossed. Stalin had to revise his foreign policy overnight. Since collective security was dead, he had to make sure of his own security, and nothing else accounts for the march to the Baltic. War with Finland was part of his "preventive encirclement strategy." Russia was making use of what we in America in those days called "a safety belt" against the aggressors. We sought to keep the belligerents outside a new 300-mile limit off our shoreline; Russia did precisely the same thing.

Mr. Wallace did not mention this history. But in the light of it, his warning against a "double cross" of Russia is equipped with a background, though probably he had in mind our repudiation of the League of Nations. Our problem is so to act that Russia can feel security within the framework of a new world organization. Otherwise she will collect her own security. After all, self-collection of security is precisely the course commended to this country by many Americans—that we should collect our own security in the form of bases in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. The suggestion as to the Pacific bases is offered repeatedly, for example, by Secretary Knox. Never is the suggestion tied up to any mandate by some world organization. Let us think how these ideas sound when they are heard in Moscow, and then Pan-Slavism won't seem so surprising.

It is obvious that if this war ends with nothing but a scramble for territory to shore up national security, World War III is inevitable. Security can never be insured by such means. If we grab one base, we shall have to grab another base in order to insure the security of the first, and so on. Thus Pan-Americanism and Pan-Slavism would follow Pan-Germanism in insuring only a new world cataclysm. Either the United States or the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics must set such an example of a belief in collective security as will be a convincing demonstration to the other. That is the problem stated in much plainer terms than the Vice President used.

Personality, Plus

Elsewhere on this page a correspondent reproaches us for an editorial concerning the cartoon-strip biography of President Roosevelt prepared and distributed by the Office of War Information. The editorial, she says, was "manifestly unfair," "subversive of truth" and "determinedly indifferent to facts." As an example of this alleged "indifference to facts," our correspondent says:

> Nowhere is there any indication that the publication is not recent, that it was printed last July by the Overseas Division of the OWI, that it was printed before Elmer Davis came on the scene, that it was not distributed to the armed forces in any large quantity, nor in any quantity in this country . . . This is as unworthy a piece of back-stabbing as Representative Lambert's attack on Mr. Roosevelt's sons . . .

Except for the playful little bit about "back-stabbing," this is substantially the same complaint made (in somewhat politer language) by Mr. Davis himself in a letter published on this page last Sunday. We had asked Mr. Davis to explain why it was necessary to spend thousands of dollars of Government money on personal publicity for the most conspicuous personage of our times, and just how such publicity could be construed as "war information." Mr. Davis retorted that he had already explained by saying (1) that the pamphlet had been prepared before he took office, (2) that it was published chiefly in foreign languages and (3) that if any copies of the pamphlet reached American soldiers this was "extremely rare and unintentional."

This, we submit, is not an explanation of why such a pamphlet, in English or in any other language, was necessary at all. Does the statement that it was "prepared" before Mr. Davis took charge of the OWI mean that he disapproves of the pamphlet? Apparently not. For at a press conference held on the afternoon of the day on which the editorial appeared, Mr. Davis made the point that Mr. Roosevelt "symbolizes the United States both as a powerful nation and as the land of liberty and democracy" and that government propaganda would be stupid not to take advantage of this fact.

Here, it seems to us, Mr. Davis is treading on rather dangerous ground. After all, the United States is still in theory a republic. It might have been fair enough to say that the President of the United States as its chief officer is (like the flag and the Constitution) one of the several symbols of the Republic. But it is another matter to identify the Republic, in the minds of either citizens or foreigners, with a single personality.

> When went there by an age, since the great flood,
> But it was famed with more than with one man?

It is not, in the light of history, too much to say that if this identification of the state and a personality were to become permanent, the Republic will have ceased to exist, except by mere convention of language.

To the lady who accuses us of disingenuousness because we did not mention, among other things, that the Roosevelt pamphlet was "printed last July before Elmer Davis came on the scene," we should like to point out that our files show that Mr. Davis was appointed head of the OWI last June 13 and took office the following week. (Who's being disingenuous here?) Of course it may very well have been that Mr. Davis was then so busy with the job of reorganization that he had not time to examine this particular pamphlet or inquire too closely about its purpose. However, Mr. Davis' position, if we read it correctly, is that while he disclaims responsibility for this particular publication, he nevertheless approves the principle on which it was prepared. That principle still seems to us seriously in conflict with the republican institutions and traditions of this Nation. And it will continue to seem so until Mr. Davis gives us a more convincing argument to the contrary than he has given us up to now.

A BOY'S WEATHER

I know how it is within a boy's head,
(I learned it from being a boy years ago)
Nothing is finer, after all is said,
Weather has power to offer than a snow.
A shower may prove a respite from the field
But only briefly, and it clogs his feet
When he returns, it is a drudge concealed;
Only a snow is perfect and complete.

No sooner is November's lease secure
And the first snowflakes are a prophecy,
Than he must rise at night and see for sure
Whether they mean to speak the truth or lie;
Seeing white proof the flakes meant what they said
He shuts the shutters and goes back to bed.

South Africa

By Janet R. Keith

New Political Victory

THE SOUTH African Assembly recently approved, by a vote of 75 to 49, a resolution permitting South African volunteer troops to serve outside Africa. The passing of this legislation was a political victory for pro-British Prime Minister Smuts, who will now be free to send his volunteers to European theaters of war if he deems it advisable.

It may seem strange on the face of it that South Africa, which entered the war in September, 1939, needed special legislation at this stage of the game to permit voluntarily enlisted forces to leave the continent. However, the nation's policy of retaining its troops on African soil has been dictated partly by reasons of military strategy and partly by political necessity.

The outbreak of war found South Africa an absolutely undefended country. Although the Union is the largest established European community in Africa, its white population numbers only 2,000,000. In 1939 there was no army to speak of, no modern fighting equipment, and no heavy industries capable of producing munitions.

Self-Protection First

South African strategists reasoned that the country's first responsibility was the defense of Africa. The strategic Cape sea route had to be protected, and the Union had pledged itself in 1924 to assume the landward defense of the British naval station at Simonstown. Stretching north from the Union was a belt of British colonies which might call upon South Africa for protection. And in the northeast there was Mussolini's Italian Empire, which was bound to cause trouble sooner or later.

For service "anywhere in Africa" the Union has raised a volunteer army of 200,000 men out of its two million white population. These troops have fought in Egypt, Libya, Ethiopia and Madagascar. And now General Smuts has seen to it that they may participate in the invasion of Europe.

But South Africa's war role has been played against a background of political struggle. Unlike the other British dominions of Canada, Australia and New Zealand, and whose people are predominantly of British origin, South Africa has a minority of English-speaking citizens. Sixty per cent of her European population is Afrikaans-speaking, descendants of early Dutch settlers.

The Dutch, like the French in Canada, were in South Africa before the British, and have never felt too happy about the British intrusion. A succession of disputes in the nineteenth century culminated in the Boer War of 1899-1902, in which the two Dutch republics of Orange Free State and Transvaal were deprived of their independence by the British. Eight years later the two republics were welded with the colonies of Natal and the Cape into the Union of South Africa, a member of the British Commonwealth with dominion status.

But a legacy of bitterness remained, and Dutch nationalist feeling was not dead. Under the leadership of its founder, General Hertzog, the Nationalist Party became the official parliamentary opposition. In 1924 it was strong enough to defeat the South African Party of General Smuts and take over the reins of government.

During the depression (1932) Hertzog and Smuts formed a United Coalition government, which gave the country a strong and successful administration. But the two leaders were never in agreement as to whether Britain's going to war would involve South Africa.

Hertzog Wanted Neutrality

When the world war broke loose in September, 1939, General Hertzog introduced a neutrality motion in Parliament. General Smuts moved an amendment calling for an end to relations with Germany. The amendment carried by a vote of 80 to 67, and General Smuts became the head of a war government.

Having led his country into war by such a slim majority, Prime Minister Smuts has had to move cautiously lest he inflame racial and political antagonisms. General Hertzog died last November. But in place of his Nationalist Party there are now two pro-Nazi, antiwar parties: Dr. Malan's Herenigde and Dr. van Rensburg's Ossewa Brandwag. Were these two groups to unite, they could form a serious threat to the Smuts government.

But the recent decision of the South African Parliament to send troops overseas was in itself an indorsemen of General Smuts' policies and an indication that the South African people, both English-speaking and Afrikaans-speaking, favor a vigorous prosecution of the war.

Realism Is Needed

By Barnet Nover

Russia As An American Problem

THE SENSATION produced by Admiral Standley's off-the-cuff remarks at a press conference in Moscow last Monday has now, fortunately, subsided. Only our enemies can derive any advantage from prolonged washing of allegedly dirty linen.

Less than 24 hours after he accused the Soviet authorities of holding back from the Russian people the facts regarding our aid to their country, the Russian radio broadcast in full the statement of Lend-Lease Administrator Edward R. Stettinius in which the latter made public the details of the shipments we have sent to the U. S. S. R.

So if the Ambassador's undiplomatic plain-speaking gave the Axis propagandists a field day and some of our unconverted isolationists a chance to vent anew their spleen against an Allied power, it also produced the intended results.

YET THE VICTORY which Ambassador Standley won is trifling and unimportant. From a realistic point of view it makes no particular difference whether the Russian authorities observe the amenities, make public acknowledgment and express the proper degree of gratitude for the planes, tanks, trucks, jeeps and food we have sent to the Soviet Union. What counts is the use to which the Russians put those supplies. And on that score we certainly have no cause for complaint.

Actually, as was soon pointed out by critics of the Ambassador, Admiral Standley was not altogether on firm ground when he gave the impression, perhaps unintended, that the Soviet press has completely ignored lend-lease aid.

The fact is that even before the Russian radio broadcast of Mr. Stettinius' statement the Russian people were by no means kept in complete ignorance of what we and the British have been sending them.

But the Ambassador was on very slippery ground, indeed, when, in the course of his remarks, he declared that while the American Congress is "big hearted and generous" the story might be different "if you give it the impression that its help means nothing."

For nothing is further from the truth, nothing is more unrealistic, nothing is more dangerous, than the thesis that the aid we are sending to Russia or, for that matter, to any other of our partners in the war, is simply an act of generosity.

No progress in the direction of building a better world order can be made so long as such a distorted view of our role as "arsenal of democracy" remains widely prevalent in the United States.

The phrase, it will be remembered, was given currency by President Roosevelt in the days when this country was only beginning to shake off the lethargy and unrealism which had dominated its thinking on world affairs so long. The concept and the reality arose out of the grim awareness that what we needed most was what, despite our vast resources, we had least of—time.

We needed time to build up an Army, time to expand our Navy, time to gear our industrial plant to the exigencies of total war. And the only way to win time was to help those nations that were then fighting the Axis to win it for us and for themselves. The wisdom and statesmanship of the Lend-Lease Act have been made so manifestly clear in the months since the measure was approved that its renewal, by a practically unanimous vote, appears certain.

It would be folly to assume that our relations with Russia in the period since we became allies has been untroubled. Difference and disagreements between us have arisen from time to time. There has been a good deal less than a meeting of minds on certain questions of procedure. The mutual suspicions of a quarter of a century have not altogether dissolved, even in the fires of a war which finds Russia and the United States fighting a common enemy.

But it would be folly of the worst kind to allow minor bickerings, pride of place and punctilio, the amenities of international intercourse or their absence, to stand in the way of basic agreement between us. A world order without Russia is bound to be a world order without stability. The same holds true of a world order from which the United States absents itself.

OUR RELATIONS with Russia as our relations with Great Britain, China and our other Allies must be based on the bedrock fact that in peace as in war we stand or fall together.

This does not mean that a complete and thoroughgoing working arrangement between us on all matters involving the peace will be easy of accomplishment. Some of the problems we shall have to solve will prove extremely difficult of solution. The necessity of dealing with these problems collectively is nonetheless inescapable unless another period of international anarchy is to be ushered in. Which brings home the point made by Vice President Wallace the other day when he declared that: "Unless the Western democracies and Russia come to a satisfactory understanding before the war ends, I very much fear that World War No. 3 will be inevitable." Truer words were never spoken.

Tires For Farmers

I am an operator of three small farms, two as dairy farms, in nearby Virginia, from which I ship over 500 quarts of milk to Washington per day.

In addition to all other farm problems, I am confronted by an OPA regulation which vexes me much. I made application to our local board for two new tires and was informed that since March 1 a farmer using his pleasure type car for farm business exclusively, with mileage of less than 1000 miles per month, could not get new tires or even second-grade tires, but was eligible for the lowest grade tires under control of the OPA, which I understand to be the old second-hand tires which were turned in by the public last fall.

My car is used to transport the farm help from one farm to the other, haul small livestock, small pieces of machinery or equipment, or any operation that is necessary to expedite the work on a farm.

There must be thousands of farmers throughout the United States who do not own a truck, but use their pleasure type cars instead, thereby conserving thousands of tires and many thousands of gallons of gasoline which are supposed to be scarce articles. My contention is that this type of farmer needs substantial tires for his car and that some change should be made to allow him to secure a good grade of tires so that when he has a breakdown and starts after repairs he can get there and get back without tire trouble.

First Things First

I have just finished reading your article in the January 3 issue of Parade, "Will Prohibition Come Back?"

The "pro" and "con" arguments presented are very good.

But what burns me to a crisp is the fact that we allow a bunch of troublemakers to waste 10 million dollars on such an enterprise. What's the matter with people back home? Don't they know there are thousands of men overseas that need planes, guns, ammunition, trucks, tanks, etc.

I say and I believe every man in our outfit believes the same way. Forget prohibition and spend the money for bonds so we can get home sooner.

Then we can all have a say as to whether we want the country wet or dry. E. J. TUCKETT.

Oft Remind Us

I have had it in mind for several days to write a letter of gratitude to The Washington Post for being a great newspaper. I wanted to express a special vote of thanks for the fine articles by Mrs. Meyer on the production situation in the Middle West; and I wanted to note appreciation of the fine editorial on "The Spanish Paradox," which appeared in The Post March 1; and to mention Walter Lippmann's outstanding discussions, and Drew Pearson's revelations. Also, I wanted to breathe a breath of thankfulness for the final disappearance of Westbrook Pegler from your columns.

And then, this morning, I came upon an editorial so manifestly unfair, so subversive of truth, so determinedly indifferent to facts which are at the command of every newspaperman, that I am tempted to cancel all the above and wonder if The Post is such a good paper after all.

The editorial, "Oft Remind Us," relating to the biography of President Roosevelt distributed by the OWI is obviously a blithe effort to make political capital out of a set of distorted facts dropped into the editorial mill. Not one of the actual facts is mentioned in any of the three paragraphs. Nowhere is there any indication that the publication is not recent, that it was printed last July by the overseas division of OWI, that it was printed before Elmer Davis came on the scene, that it was not distributed to the armed forces in any large quantity, nor in any quantity in this country. Nowhere is there any indication that it was devised as publicity of obvious interest to the many peoples now acutely cognizant of the United States and in need of information. Nowhere is there the fact that it was printed in Arabic, Swedish, Turkish, Chinese, Icelandic, and half a dozen other languages, to inform those peoples about a man who stands to them as a symbol of America.

If your editorial writer had mentioned a few facts, his objections to the pamphlet would not have been sustained, so he just sidestepped the facts. This is as unworthy a piece of back-stabbing as Representative Lambertson's attack on Mr. Roosevelt's sons. It is most unworthy to be in the same paper as that which published "Spanish Paradox," an editorial which dealt with facts and deduced correct assumptions from facts.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Private Purkey

Dear Editor:

I ain't sure this letter will reach you, but if it does I hope you can do something to get me out of some trouble I just got into in the Army. I am in the mill again and it is all plain to me that I am a victim of injustice, foul play, unfair treatment and partiality. In fact, I am just getting a dirty deal.

* * * *

All I did was this. Last Monday there was a big attack staged and I did not show up for it on account of plenty of reasons. First, I never feel good on Monday mornings. It is my best day for sleeping. Second, I feel extra tired on account I am out late Saturday night and have a big head all day Sunday. Third, the monotony of the life in the Army begins to get me. Fourth, I feel what is called "the mounting strain of the war effort."

* * * *

So when the bugle calls come Monday morning I do not pay no attention. I just pull the blanket over my noggin and play dead. All I know is I am not in the mood for my best efforts. After a while Sergeant Mooney comes in and yells for me to fall in, and make it snappy, or else. Well, you know how it is with sergeants. They are class-conscious. So I get nowhere telling him the war effort is beginning to get me, and if I am to do my best work I have to have more time off now and then.

* * * *

Well, he reports to the captain, and the captain tells a colonel, and it gets up to a couple of generals, who are in it for themselves and who do not have the viewpoint of the common man. So they say a big attack is on; that the war is reaching a peak; that everybody has got to help win, and that what I am doing is willful absenteeism.

* * * *

I offer to put the whole matter up to Miss Perkins in Washington or to any board they can name there, on account I do not know what willful absenteeism is, and neither do they, and we should have a board or committee make a ruling.

* * * *

By this time our side is getting shelled and the officers are losing patience with me. They are like that. I try to justify my not working Mondays on the ground of bad transportation facilities (they want me to walk), bad housing conditions and the long hours of Army life. I quote figures to show there was a decline from 8.3 per cent to 7.5 per cent in Monday morning absenteeism in the Army and Navy last month. And I warn them they will lose the war if they force a soldier to fight when he doesn't feel at his peak.

* * * *

But I get nowheres, except in the guardhouse. I warn them that they cannot punish me this way without depriving me of the constitutional right of due process, but they just laugh. So I am in serious trouble in my simple fight of the common man on the lower economic level to get his rights.

* * * *

Anything you can do will be appreciated, and if you can do it before next Monday comes it will be appreciated, as I would like to sleep that day, too, no matter what is going on in my division.

Yours,
Oscar Purkey.

Plea For Blood Donors

The earth was red where he did lie,
He gave his pint, and more,
So won't you give, so boys may live
To end and win this war?

You haven't done a thing worth while—
Nor come close to your share—
Until you've bled to save the life
Of some boy over there!

There will be a 5 to 10 per cent rise in liquor prices next week. This is fair warning just in case your present bank won't accommodate you with a big enough loan for another bottle.

Farm Help

I feel very strongly that something should be done by the Government to furnish labor to the farmers. But it should be kept in mind that if men are furnished they should be those that are more or less skilled in the type of farming conducted in the locality. A good New England farmer would not be much good in a cotton field. And a cotton hand would have to be trained to do the work of a New England farm.

Dairy men are probably the hardest hit by labor shortage and should be given special consideration. ROBERT P. BARRY.

Negro Achievement

May I take this occasion to thank you for your editorial, "Negroes and the War," in The Washington Post March 1.

We who have seen the heroic effort of the Negroes to take advantage of such opportunity as is given them regret that for the most part newspapers are apt to give them only unpleasant publicity.

I wish more achievement made by them could receive public notice. I am amazed that the public seems to know so little of their attainment.

Army Needs More Doctors

Thousands To Go

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 10.—During 1943 the Army plans to commission 6900 physicians, 3000 interns and resident doctors from hospitals, 4800 dentists and 900 veterinarians, the Journal of the American Medical Association announced today.

Under a new procedure, the announcement said, none will be commissioned until he has been declared "available" by the procurement and assignment service of the War Manpower Commission. The surgeon general of the Army has discontinued all medical recruiting boards.

Most of the new Army doctors will be obtained from 20 States and the District of Columbia, some States already having filled their quotas.

The 20 States where physicians will be procured were listed as California, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missuori, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin.

The following States, the journal said, have already contributed more physicians to the armed forces than the sum of their 1942 and 1943 quotas and will not be called on during this year to furnish any more doctors, except interns and residents and except special cases for specific position vacancies: Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia and Wyoming.

It said there will be no procurement of dentists, except special cases for specific position vacancies, in the following 16 States: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

"At present there are no restrictions on the recruiting of veterinarians," it said.

Women Doctors Urged for Army

Spokesmen for the Nation's 8000 women physicians argued vigorously yesterday in favor of the commissioning of eligible women doctors in the Medical Corps of the Army, asking that the individual's medical ability, instead of sex, be the criterion for admission.

Favorable testimony was given before a subcommittee of the House Military Committee by Dr. Emily Dunning Barringer of New York, chairman of the special committee of the American Medical Women's Association, Inc., to secure commissions for women physicians in the Army and Navy. Judge Dorothy Kenyon of the Municipal Court of New York, legal advisor to the committee, and Dr. Sara Jordan, chairman of the women doctors subcommittee of the procurement and assignment board of the War Manpower Commission. Others who testified in favor of the bill were Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (Republican) of Massachusetts, and author of the WAAC bill; Dr. Charles Farr of New York, attending surgeon of New York City Hospital, and Dr. Oswald Swinney Lowsley, director of the Brady Urological Institute of the New York Hospital.

New Catholic Agency to Give Poswar Help

A new agency to give postwar aid to the peoples of Europe and to help in other reconstruction programs was announced yesterday by the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Known as War Relief Services, the new bureau will be directed by the Right Rev. Msgr. Bryan J. McEntegart, leader in social work through his quarter century of priesthood.

War Relief Services will seek coordination of Catholic organizations in this country and will also provide a link with Catholic agencies abroad, the N. C. W. C. announcement said. In many areas abroad, Catholic Church agencies which continue in close contact with the people may prove to be the only centers of group loyalty and confidence remaining after the war, it is suggested.

The new director, Monsignor McEntegart, is a native of New York, who for 21 years has been director of the division of children of the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York. He has been president of the New York State Conference on Social Work and of the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

The Bishops War Emergency and Relief Committee will continue its work for current relief needs, while the new War Relief Services will concentrate on postwar problems, it was stated.

Very Versatile

Steel Raft Held Answer To Sea Peril

After a year of grueling development, the Kokomo Kid was promenaded yesterday in the Washington Channel for the edification of three Coast Guard admirals, several captains, miscellaneous lieutenants, sailors, newsmen and cameramen, and impressed all as the Merchant Marine's answer to a very long prayer.

The Kid, christened by one of its present owners, was evolved about a year ago in the yards of the Globe-American Corp., in Kokomo, Ind., and was meant to be exactly what it appeared to be yesterday—a life raft that would outmaneuver, outlast, out-accommodate and out-launch the lifeboats now being used by all seagoing vessels.

Bulkheads Float It

It approximates a corrugated steel barge, 16 feet long, 8 feet wide and 3 feet deep, and is kept afloat by 14 bulkheads filled with air.

Its championship qualities have long been agreed upon by its manufacturer, the Coast Guard, Merchant Marine and interested amateurs. But the Kid, brought to the shores of the channel, chiefly for the edification of significant persons quartered in Washington, miles from Kokomo, outmaneuvered even its own reputation.

The raft had been nudging the Coast Guard's channel sea wall since last Thursday waiting for the big day yesterday. Plans had been made to have the Coast Guard officials ride in the raft and get the feel of it, but the absence of any wind compelled them to line the sea wall and view the Kid as it was towed out and back in the channel by a river boat. Eventually it got into open water, hoisted sail and presented a rather vague picture of its abilities. It did float.

Extremely Versatile

This raft, however, literally can be shot off the side of a vessel, and, with both sides being the same, can manage right-side-up or upside down. Air-tight compartments can be reached through either side. More than 20 men can live on the raft for an incredible length of time, it was said. With dehydrated foods it can be provisioned for almost a year. A tarpaulin cover makes living bearable, if cramped.

Among those present at the display were Vice Admiral R. R. Waesche, commandant of the United States Coast Guard; Rear Admiral Lloyd T. Chanker, assistant to the commandant; Rear Admiral Harvey Johnson, engineer in chief of the Coast Guard and Capt. H. C. Shepheard, of the inspection unit. No Navy men were present.

Negotiated Labor Peace

Held Better Than Forced

By Roland Nicholson
Post Staff Writer

Reporting the existence of "a real opportunity now to adjust" the labor situation, Henry J. Kaiser yesterday declared it was much more desirable for the Nation's interests that such an adjustment be achieved through negotiation rather than compulsion by law.

"We don't want two wars on our hand," said the shipbuilder, who was referring particularly to labor jurisdictional disputes. He said he had received definite indications from all parties concerned—the A. F. of L., C. I. O. and National Labor Relations Board of a desire to settle the jurisdictional squabble at his Portland yard, and that he believed such a settlement would be achieved "within a few weeks."

Silent On Method

"But if this particular dispute is not settled, I believe the jurisdictional problem will increase," he told reporters at an interview here. When newsmen, recalling that on the day before Kaiser had suggested freezing maintenance of union membership contracts, asked him about the actual mechanics of improving the labor situation, he would not comment. "If I do," he said, "I'll become the advocate of some one method, and that's just what I don't want to do.

"I have but one interest—and that's more and more production, and that can bring peace earlier than anything I know of."

He felt, Kaiser said, that the press could perform a genuine service at the present time by emphasizing the necessity of management, labor and Government getting together in a concerted and friendly effort to end jurisdictional disputes everywhere.

The rest of the hour-long interview ranged over subjects as varied as the shipbuilder's far-flung interests. He revealed that Kaiser-produced magnesium in February was "roughly" two million pounds, or double January production. He gave the figure first in tons, but later apologized. "I'm used to thinking in tons," he smiled.

Man-Hours Reduced

The most recent liberty ship launched by one of his yards, he said, required a total of 378,000 man-hours, or "70,000 man-hours less than anything else in the country." The figure, he said, included everything—labor, office employes and the work required on the ship until it sailed off with a cargo. Such reductions in the number of man-hours required to produce an implement of war hold a partial solution, the shipbuilder said, to the manpower problem.

"We are very enthusiastic," he reported, about the giant cargo airplane he is building with Howard Hughes. "It'll be flying within a year." He declined, for obvious reasons, to go into details about the ship.

His hope to double production this year in his other airplane and airplane-parts plants was voiced by Kaiser, who continually was pulling production sheets and charts from a wallet which apparently contained the answer to just about anything a reasonable man would want to know.

Service Ribbon Plan

He had something to say, too, about absenteeism. For one thing, he has designed a small ribbon, similar to the service bars worn by fighting men, which will give, each month, a different color to the employe whose employment record is perfect. At the end of a year, if the employe has a perfect ribbon with 12 different colors, he'll receive a star to be worn with his identification badge. Kaiser believes this will be an incentive to some, that it will award recognition where recognition is due, and shame some of the laggards into better working records.

1-House Legislature Addressed by Norris

Lincoln, March 10 (AP).—Former Senator George W. Norris, making his first appearance before Nebraska's one-house Legislature, whose creation he fathered, told the legislators today the world will judge its work "not so much by the laws you enact, but as to your preservation of every democratic right all free people should have."

"What little part I had in bringing this Legislature about is a part of my life in which I always take satisfaction and pride," he said. "It was a great step in human progress."

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

General Giraud At The Rubicon

IN DECLARING that "decrees signed at Vichy are of course invalid in North Africa," General Giraud has begun to face, though he has by no means solved, the fundamental problem which underlies the whole French political muddle. It is not certain from the general's statement that he himself has as yet grasped the problem fully. For he was declaring invalid two Vichy decrees affecting, as it happens, the status of Algerian Jews. But the crucial point is that these decrees were signed by Marshal Petain on October 19, 1942, some weeks before the Allied landing and the German occupation of the whole of France, and while the United States still had diplomatic relations with the Vichy government. Yet after saying that the Vichy decrees are invalid, General Giraud goes on to explain that "the German occupation has interrupted the free exercise of French sovereignty. We have to take the logical consequences. All that is necessary will be done."

LIPPMANN

What does he mean by "the German occupation"? Does he mean the German occupation of Paris in June, 1940, or does he mean the German occupation of Vichy in November, 1942? If he means only the occupation of Vichy, then on what ground are two decrees signed by Marshal Petain on October 19 invalid? But if he means the occupation of Paris, then all Vichy decrees made since the armistice of 1940 are also invalid, and the whole Petain regime has always been illegitimate, and nothing done in the name of Vichy or of Marshal Petain has ever had any authority.

IT WOULD appear that though he invoked the authority of Marshal Petain when he first entered North Africa, now General Giraud is moving toward the complete repudiation of Vichy. This week his official broadcasting station at Algiers described Marshal Petain's government as "this shadow government of prisoners and traitors." But if General Giraud is crossing the Rubicon by repudiating Vichy and all its works, then the real problem of France is in front of him. By what authority do General Giraud and his associates govern? To whom do they owe allegiance? By what right do they raise armies, wear the French uniform, carry the French flag and make war?

These are not abstract and academic questions. On the contrary, they are practical questions of great military and political consequences, and the failure to anticipate these questions, and to have coherent answers to them, is the reason why the movement toward French unity has been so sadly messed up.

CONSIDER, for example, the case of the French battleship Richlieu and of the other naval vessels which have recently come to this country to be refitted and repaired. To whom do the officers who command these ships owe allegiance? The answer is that some of them, at least, believe they are bound by an oath of personal allegiance to Marshal Petain. But Marshal Petain is not at war with Germany. He is in fact collaborating with Hitler. Therefore, if these officers take over these ships and fire on the Germans, they are, according to the terms of their oath, traitors. And if they do not fire on the Germans, then they are, according to our expectations, traitors.

Obviously, then, these officers cannot be entrusted with the command of a battleship until their oath of allegiance to Marshal Petain has been solemnly abrogated and they have taken a new oath of allegiance.

THE SAME problem exists on an even greater scale in respect to the French army in North Africa which we have promised to equip. The officers of the army are under an oath of allegiance to Marshal Petain, and until the oath is abrogated, the best of them are not in honor free to make engagements in our cause, and the worst of them are not to be trusted.

Yet it is impossible to create an army of Frenchmen without their knowing and without our knowing to whom and to what they owe allegiance. Is it to General Giraud? From whom does General Giraud derive his authority? It cannot be from Vichy if the decrees and therefore the authority of Vichy have always been invalid.

THERE IS only one possible solution to these puzzles. It is to restore formally and solemnly the constitution and the laws of the only legitimate French regime, namely that of the Third Republic. This has been done in all the French territory administered by the Fighting French, and it will have to be done, and should long ago have been done, in North and West Africa. Then there will be something to which the officers and men and political administrators can take an oath of allegiance, and, then, have the right to carry the flag of France.

And it is under the authority of the French constitution and laws that some kind of organ of French action, some form of trusteeship of the French interests, will have to be set up. This is the only way in which Frenchmen can be reunited. They cannot be reunited by exhortation from Washington. They cannot be reunited by a deal among generals, some of whom owe allegiance to the French Republic, some to Marshal Petain who subverted the Republic, some to nothing in particular except the fact that Mr. Robert Murphy selected them and made a secret agreement with them.

And until Frenchmen are reunited on a legitimate and constitutional ground, it would be a mistake, and indeed an imprudent risk, to invest the materials and munitions and precious shipping space which would be required in order to create armed forces that no one has a legitimate right to command, in whose name no one can make binding agreements, for whose conduct in the future no one is clearly accountable.

THERE IS reason to believe that the correct solution will eventually be reached. For much has happened behind the scenes since the President and the Prime Minister were at Casablanca, and not the least of the things that have happened is that new men have gone out to North Africa who know how the political business was bungled and how much will have to be done to repair it.

'Blues' Laid to Doom-Writers

"Doomsday writers" were blamed yesterday for a widespread confusion of the public mind and lack of faith in the Nation's ability to solve its postwar problems by Charles B. Brown, advertising and publicity manager of the National Broadcasting Co.

Brown, whose travels last year in this country covered some 30,000 miles, told the Washington Advertising Club that the "morale of the nation is decisively and negatively affected by this underlying dogma of defeat."

"Hundreds of thousands of people believe that after the war America faces great economic confusion and hardship," he said.

A recent survey of the Psychological Corporation showed, he said, that 70 per cent of the persons interviewed think that various groups are using the war to promote their own selfish interests. Business and industry were accused by 34 per cent, politicians by 33 per cent, labor unions by 30 per cent and farmers by 12 per cent, some naming more than one group.

Vitamins for Victory

Even vitamins will help to win the war and Uncle Sam is making certain that his men are getting plenty of vitamin-rich fresh vegetables and fruits.

Carrots, for example, are of particular importance to the air force. In addition to health-building Vitamin A they also provide Carotene which helps to prevent night blindness.

From the fields of the West, Union Pacific transports immense quantities of fresh vegetables and fruits to military supply depots and civilian markets.

Troubles Pile Up for Giants as Lieber Quits

Browns Also Hit by Loss Of Outfielder

McQuillen Will Be Called Up By Army; Deal Between Phils, Giants Collapses

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—The New York Giants lost another player today when Hank Lieber, veteran outfielder, notified Manager Mel Ott he planned to remain on his chicken ranch at Tucson, Ariz.

Lieber, who is married but has no children, said he had received an agricultural deferment from his draft board.

Ott also received a call from Bill Cox, new owner of the Philadelphia Phillies, but neither would say if they talked about a trade.

Before Cox's arrival, however, Ott said he was not interested now in either of the Phillies' first basemen—Babe Dahlgren and Ed Levy.

"We'll string along with Johnny Mize until Uncle Sam actually takes him and then we'll start looking in a hurry for a first baseman," said Ott. Mize recently was reclassified 1-A.

Beckons McQuillan

Frederick, Md., March 10 (AP).—Glenn McQuillen, 26-year-old outfielder of the St. Louis Browns, will be called up for induction in either the April or May quota of his Selective Service Board, Frederick County draft officials said today.

McQuillen, a resident of Brunswick, Md., previously had been classified 3-A. He is unmarried, but supports his mother. The draft board said the ball player already had undergone his physical examination and would be included in one of the next two groups to be called up for service.

McQuillen starred in both baseball and football at Western Maryland College for two years before signing with the St. Louis Browns. He played with San Antonio in the Texas League for a season and spent two seasons with Toledo in the American Association. Last year was his first full season with the Browns.

The draft board said that the 3-A classification of Charlie Keller, hard-hitting New York Yankee outfielder, was unchanged. Keller, a resident of Frederick, is married and the father of two children.

Scarborough Stricken

Pitcher Rae Scarborough of the Nats yesterday notified President Clark Griffith that he would be unable to report for the start of spring training at College Park next week, due to a siege of pneumonia.

Scarborough was stricken at his North Carolina home. He stated he is on his way to recovery. He hopes to join the club "within a month." A right-hander, Scarborough saw service with both Chattanooga and the Nats last season, winning two games for Washington and losing one. He holds a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Lions Rally And Defeat Reds, 2 to 1

Rallying in the last period, the Washington Lions defeated the Providence Reds 2-1 for their third straight home victory in the American Hockey League last night at Uline Arena.

Alex Ritson, former Lions center, scored the only Providence goal early in the first period, on passes from Andy Brown and Alf Webster. From that point it was a tough battle of goalies, Capt. Mike Karakas of the Reds matching save for save with the Lions' Paul Gauthier.

Neither team could crack the others defense throughout the mid session and halfway into the final frame. At 9:53 of the third stanza flashy Rod Lorrain, encouraged Washington hopes and spoiled Karakas' shutout chances with the tying goal. Nakina Smith and Ossie Asmundson set up the swift scoring play.

Less than three minutes later, Winger Herb Foster came crashing through with what proved the winning goal.

Immediately after the game both teams entrained for Providence, where they meet for the last time tonight. The Lions wind up their American League schedule against Pittsburgh at Uline's Saturday night.

Swedish Track Stars Accept U. S. Race Bids

Haegg, Andersson and Lidman Await Transportation for American Showings

By International News Service

Stockholm, March 10.—Sweden's well known track stars, Gunder Haegg, Arne Andersson and Haakan Lidman, have accepted invitations to run in American Championship competitions June 30 and July 1, it was announced today.

Charles Jansson, secretary of the Swedish Athletic Association, said the men would come to the United States if American track officials can arrange clipper transportation for them.

Haegg, Sweden's great middle distance runner who in recent months has smashed nine world track records, is looked upon as the man who finally will run the long talked about four-minute mile. In the United States, he is expected to meet the nation's top milers, including Gil Dodds, Earl Mitchell and others, as well as taking on Greg Rice, the two-mile champion, over longer routes.

The Swedish "Torpedo" never has competed in the United States, and there long has been a drive on to bring him here to meet the best runners we can produce. If his projected visit this summer is followed through as planned, Haegg may stage a triumphal tour overshadowing that of the great Finnish track star, Paavo Nurmi.

Despite the war, Haegg's track exploits have excited the sports world, and films shown in this country have proved him to be perhaps the greatest "style" runner in the sports world. His form is said to be unsurpassed, and his effortless running without parallel among modern runners.

Ahead 20-13 at half, the locals managed to hold off a fast finish by the visitors to seal the triumph.

War Slant To Border Olympics

By the Associated Press

Laredo, Tex., March 10.—War-born events—the gas mask relay, wall scaling, the obstacle race—which toughen a man to fight for his country instead of sports medals will spice the Nation's first outdoor track and field meet of the season.

And there'll be many athletes competing in the eleventh annual Border Olympics Friday night well qualified in these events. Seven service teams will participate alongside of approximately 35 college, university and high school squads.

A special division was created this year for service teams, which also will test their abilities at straightaway racing, hurdling and relay running against Oklahoma and Texas college stars.

The meet has approval of military authorities who have urged that such athletic events be maintained not only for sustaining civilian morale but for keeping young men in training for possible military duties.

Chalky Wright Wins

Cleveland, March 10 (AP).—Ring wise Chalky Wright, former featherweight titlist in New York State, knocked out young Joey Pirrone of Cleveland in the third round of a scheduled 10-rounder at the arena tonight. Ancient Chalky gave the inexperienced Clevelander a boxing lesson before delivering the kayo punch, a right to the head.

Yellow Mask Tops Koverly In Mat Match

Extra! Extra! The Yellow Mask finally won a wrestling match, defeating George (K. O.) Koverly after 26 minutes of the feature struggle at Turner's Arena last night.

As some 1800 fans sat entranced, the hooded fellow came from behind after having spent a goodly portion of the script on the mat and clamped a wristlock and body press on the heroic Koverly to cop the decision.

The struggle was especially grim all the way, but Koverly had the better of the fisticuffing and the Halloween hangover was constantly clutching his middle as result of the Koverly fists.

In the semifinal, Max Krauser won a decision, Referee Benny Bortnick lost a shirt and Emil Dusek lost face as Krauser used an airplane spin and a body press to retire Dusek in 23 minutes. Before the hostilities had ceased both grapplers had taken several trips out among the fans.

The Adonis-like Herman Rohde won a tainted decision over volatile Michele Leone, the Mighty Mouthpiece, when the Italian was disqualified after 20 minutes for being uncouth. All Leone was doing was giving Rohde the business with a Cobra Clutch, but the business appeared flukey to the referee, who called a halt to the waltz.

Rotund Abie Coleman and vilainous Jim Austeri battled to a half-hour draw in the opener. Embarrassed at the lack of action, they attempted something extra after the bell, but were hastily herded back to the dressing room.—OSCAR ELDER

London, March 10.—The United States Army soccer team entered for the Inter-Allied Cup Championship, starting here March 27, is tuning up for the first big crash and in a tryout today swamped a British Army combination, 7 to 1.

Playing at a camp "somewhere in England," the Americans showed dazzling speed and skill which surprised the experts and kept the home boys guessing. Star of the United States team was Private First Class Benjamin Sentute of Washington, left-winger, who twice scored goals.

Man o' War Retired at Age of 26

Big Red's Bookings For '43 Canceled By Owner Riddle; Sired 350 Foals

By the Associated Press

Lexington, Ky., March 10.—Owner Samuel D. Riddle today announced that all bookings for Man O' War for the 1943 season had been canceled and that it was improbable the famous race horse and sire would be bred to any mares in the future.

Big Red, as he is known to thousands of race fans, will observe his twenty-sixth birthday March 29 and it is because of the stallion's advanced age that Riddle decided to retire him from stud. The horse, which has become a legend of the race track, stands at his owner's Faraway Farms here. He is still in excellent health for a horse of his age.

Sired 350 Foals

To the first of this year, Man O' War had sired 350 foals of racing age and these offsprings had earned $3,007,967, an average earning of $8594 a foal.

Among his best get have been War Admiral, Crusader, American Flag, Mars, Edith Cavell and Baton Rouge.

The son of Fair Play and Mahubah, bred by August Belmont and purchased by Riddle as a yearling, was retired to stud in 1921 after racing two seasons. He won 20 of his 21 races.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

This may not be an important thought, but unless the war ends within the next few months, a year will have passed without the heavyweight champion of the world defending his title in an American ring. Not since 1936, has the heavyweight title been in storage that long.

POVICH

Nobody can accuse Joe Louis of ducking any challenge, of course. He's in the Army and so is his No. 1 challenger, Billy Conn. Louis' title is frozen and he'll still be the champion when he's mustered out. That will be all right with the country's fight fans. Before he went into the Army, Louis was the busiest of all heavyweight champions. He gave them more action than any champ in history.

Jimmy Braddock was the holder of the title the last time a year passed with no defense of it. That was, as we were saying, in 1936. Braddock had won the title in 1935 from a surprising supine Maxie Baer, who only a year before had knocked down Primo Carnera 11 times before knocking him out and was threatening to rule the heavyweight division for years to come. But against Braddock, Baer didn't fight a lick and lost the title virtually by default.

Braddock will never be rated as much of a champion. The first time he defended the title, he lost it. He will live, though, as the Cinderella Man of the prize fight industry because he came off the docks as a WPA worker to begin anew a fight career that had seemingly ended a couple of years before. The night Baer stopped Carnera, Braddock was fighting as a washed-up preliminary boy on the same card.

The boxing fathers who were supposed to insist that the champion defend his title every six months were indulgent with Braddock, letting him remain inactive for two years. Because he was a cinch to get licked by Joe Louis, the No. 1 challenger, Braddock spent his two years as title holder mopping up the profits of exhibition tours, and then was persuaded to get into a ring with Louis only after being offered 15 per cent of Louis' future earnings as champion. Eventually, Louis knocked him out in eight rounds at Chicago in June, 1937.

Compared to Louis' activity as champion—he has defended his title 20 times in six years—the heavyweight division was stagnant during the reign of Jack Dempsey. The old Mauler risked his crown only six times in the seven years he held it, and during the three years following his knockout of Luis Firpo, Dempsey didn't defend his title until he stepped into the ring against Tunney to lose it on points in September, 1926.

In the two years that Tunney was champion, he defended his title only twice before retiring. His first defense was the memorable long-count fight with Dempsey in September, 1927, at Chicago, and in his valedictory he fought a hand-picked opponent, Tom Heeney, in 1928.

The heavyweight division sank to its absolute nadir during the two-year period when Max Schmeling was recognized as world champion. Schmeling was the only man in history to win the title sitting down. That's what he was doing, claiming a foul, when the judges awarded him the title in the match with Jack Sharkey in the fourth round of their bout in June, 1930. The bout was staged to name a successor to Tunney as champion, but Schmeling wasn't widely accepted as the champ.

The title was clarified to most everybody's satisfaction two years later, however, when Sharkey met Schmeling again and outpointed him in 15 rounds. Sharkey, though, like Braddock, won't go down as much of a champion. He, too, lost the title the first time he defended it. Primo Carnera knocked him out in six rounds.

Louis, as we were saying, has given the fight customers more of a look at the heavyweight champion than any man before him. Never a year has passed when he didn't defend his title three times. In 1941, he went to the post with his title on the line no less than seven times, winning every fight by a knock-out. That was when Louis was whaling away at his "Bum of the Month Club," composed of Red Burman, Gus Dorazio, Abe Simon, Tony Musto, Buddy Baer, Billy Conn and Lou Nova.

Conn remains as the only man on the fistic scene with a chance to take Louis' title. If the war doesn't continue for too many years a Louis-Conn fight is sure-pop to be the first big ante-bellum attraction. Conn was beating Louis on points until Joe knocked him out in the thirteenth round and saved his title. Conn has always had a simple explanation for how that happened. He says: "I missed with a right, and got hit with a left."

On the Line—With Considine—What Interests You?

New York, March 10.—What interests you?

Boxing? "We don't want no 4-F heavyweight champions," Tami Mauriello told us the other night, looking up from a thick steak. "If I beat Jimmy Bivins Friday night, and somebody calls me the duration champion, or some title like that, I'm going to take a punch at the guy who calls me that.

CONSIDINE

"Duration champ! What kind of animal is that. It's a cheap, lousy thing to inflict on the public. Everybody knows—and that includes me and Bivins—that Joe Louis could knock us both out in one evening and maybe throw in Billy Conn for good measure.

"It's an insult to Joe for promoters to put on those phony 'duration' championship matches. I'm glad Mike Jacobs don't go for that. I'm glad the New York Boxing Commission won't allow it either. Joe's so far and away the best there is that it's crazy to mention 'champion' in connection with anybody else.

"Maybe Bivins and I are the best around today. I guess our records show that. But neither of us is fighting for a title. We're just fighting and I hope it's a good fight. Louis, like I said, would bat us around the ring. Conn could beat either of us too. That isn't saying he always will, or that even Joe always will. I certainly want to fight him for his title some day, but I don't want any part of it while his back's turned."

Tami is optimistic about beating Bivins, even though Bivins handed him his only defeat as a heavyweight. "I wasn't right for that fight," he explained. "The Cleveland water didn't agree with me, and besides, I got homesick. It was my first fight out of town. Now I'm okay. Al Savani's got me in the best shape of my life. I'm going to reverse that other decision. And along about April, when my draft physical comes up, I think I'll be in the same Army with the real champ—Joe Louis."

Baseball? Well, listen to Ed Barrow:

"The Yankees have lost a grand ball club, but we're going to have a darn good one this season. You could make a first class outfit out of the men we have in the services—DiMaggio, Henrich, Selkirk, Hassett, Rizzuto, Ruffing, Majeski, Strum, Sylvestri and a few others. Besides, Rolfe has left us and Gomez has been traded. All in all, the Yanks have been hit harder than any other team, with the possible exception of the Red Sox."

Or Branch Rickey:

"I think baseball is in for one of its biggest years, so far as attendances are concerned. It places the least possible strain on gas and rubber shortages. Every major league park can be reached by streetcar, subway or regular bus. The baseball won't be quite as good. Every team has lost vital players, but the competition will be there, and that's the important thing.

"The Cards are the club to beat. They've lost Beazley, Slaughter and Moore, but as far as the rest of the league is concerned, that's not enough. They have so darn many fine young ball players on their farms."

Racing? Colonel Bradley has not got a horse in the Derby this year. It must be one of the few times over the past 25 years that the veteran gambler who has won the classic four times hasn't had his colors carried.

Bradley had no good 3-year-old last year, but often he has put even second-raters in the "run for the roses," and the presence of even a second-rater always brought up memories of what his nags had done in the past.

BRADLEY

Bradley ran one-two in the 1921 Derby with Behave Yourself and Black Servant. He duplicated that in 1926 with the winner, Bubbling Over, and the place horse, Bagenbaggage. In 1922 his Bet Mosie ran second to the great Morvich. In 1932 he won with Burgoo King and came back in 1933 with the winner, Broker's Tip. His Bimelech, unbeaten as a 2-year-old in 1939, was odds-on to win the Derby but finished behind the upset winner, Gallahadion.

Field of 14 Expected to Start in Kentucky Derby

Count Fleet Favored at 2-to-1 Price

Chop Chop Rated Outstanding Horse From East; West Holds Upper Hand

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—Take the fingers of both hands and the toes of one foot, and you'll probably have the size of the 1943 Kentucky Derby starting field, with enough left over for a dark horse.

Barring the arrival of something that looks like a Derby horse in developments the next few weeks, the only field you can consider right now includes seven virtually definite starters and seven others regarded as possibilities. As for the others of the 110 who were nominated for this sixty-ninth run for the roses May 1, they had the satisfaction of seeing their names in the papers, but their best chance of getting into the Derby at this writing would be to buy a ticket at the box office.

Yet, the 14 still in the list—give or take a few—make it look like a better-than-bad get-together for Col. Matt Winn's trolley-car taffy pull, especially when you consider that a number of folks are wondering why any other geegees will even show up to tangle with Count Fleet, whose 2 to 1 price tag now stands as the shortest priced winter book favorite in history.

The West holds the big hand this year, topped off by the trump ace—the Fleet Count, whose owner, Mrs. John D. Hertz is more often listed as a Chicagoan than a New Yorker.

With such of the East's oldtimers as Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable and William Woodward's Belair barn housing nothing that looks like $75,000 worth of Derby horse, the East's only bright boy just now is Chop Chop from the Mill River stable of Mrs. Barclay Douglas of Long Island.

Aside from Chop Chop and Count Fleet, the more-or-less definite starters figure to be Devil's Thumb, owned by W. E. Boeing, the Seattle Fortress manufacturer; Allen T. Simmons' Blue Swords, the Ohio standard bearer; Ocean Wave, successor to Whirlaway from Warren Wright's Kentucky breeding ground; Pop's Pick, the colt Texas Ben Whitaker bought from Elmer Dale Shaffer, and Amber Light.

On the possibility side are the other half of Boeing's two-motored entry, Slide Rule, provided his legs have rounded into shape again; A. R. Smith's Through Bound, who won the Inaugural Handicap at Oaklawn this winter, then was injured; J. Graham Brown's mud-running Seven Hearts, the pride and joy of Louisville; Valdina Way, a Texan from Emerson Woodward's barn; A. C. Ernst's Alquest, although he's been ailing this winter; William DuPont's Suncap, a son of Rosemont who looked like quite a hoss early last year, and Burnt Cork, a $400 yearling buy and $10,000 winner last year, owned by Eddie Anderson, who does something or other on the radio under the name of Rochester.

Lew Jenkins Goes To the 'Dogs' for U. S. Coast Guard

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., March 10.—Guardsman Lew Jenkins, former lightweight boxing champion of the world has—to his astonishment — gone to the dogs.

LEW JENKINS

Several weeks back when the former pugilist was stationed in Norfolk he told a reporter the reason he chose the Coast Guard over other branches of the service was because he believed he would get a chance to work with his first love (horses) while doing beach patrol duty.

Imagine the Texas-born fighter's surprise when he was told to proceed to Philadelphia to learn the necessary fundamentals required for working with the canines.

Walker-Musto To Take Final Drills Today

Buddhy Walker, Columbus Negro, and Tony Musto of Chicago will go through their final workouts today at Apollo Athletic Club in preparation for their 10-round bout tomorrow night at Uline Arena, winner of which probably will be rewarded with a future bout with Arturo Godoy, the South American.

Walker, a superior puncher, continued to rule a 6-to-5 favorite yesterday, but plenty of Musto supporters were in sight, and indications were that even money will be offered at bell time.

Musto not only defeated Lee Savold at a time Savold was ranked on a par with Billy Conn as the outstanding contender for Joe Louis' world's heavyweight championship late last summer but also shares with Bob Pastor, Melio Bettina and Lem Franklin the distinction of having scored over Jimmy Bivina, generally recognized as the duration heavyweight champion.

Musto, a rough, tough veteran who carries plenty of authority behind a steaming left hook, also will be remembered for the gallant nine-round stand he made against Joe Louis in St. Louis two years ago when he lost on a technical knockout due to a cut eye after Louis' best punches had failed to put him down for a count.

A trio of six rounders pair off: Tony Geno, New York crowd pleaser, vs. Joe Harris, colored Coast Guardsman of Curtis Bay, Md., welterweights; Charley Crump, also a Curtis Bay Coast Guardsman, vs. Danny Biggers, Baltimore, both colored, heavyweights, and Lambertine Williams, popular colored middleweight, vs. Buddy Holmes.

Not All the Ace Pictures Are Currently on View

Ruth Hussey, in Person, for Next Premiere; Award Pictures Being Rerun Locally; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

WITH SUCH STERLING EXHIBITS of the high reaches of which the cinema is capable as "Random Harvest," "Air Force" and "Yankee Doodle Dandy" still booming along in public consciousness and favor, it is nice to know that Washington filmgoers will not be "let down" at the end of their current runs. There are other splendid pictures coming up.

VAN HEFLIN

One of these is "Tennessee Johnson." For a matter of weeks now, we have been iterating and reiterating that in this absorbing—even if mildly controversial — subject, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has gone and done it again. No need at the moment to expatiate further on the reasons for our enthusiasm over the conspicuous merits of this picturized story of the salient events in the life of the only President of the United States ever called upon to stand an impeachment trial for high crimes and misdemeanors in office. It casts a great illumination upon the character and career of one of the most maligned figures in American history. And it does it with dignity, feeling and fine discretion.

But the point is that "Tennessee Johnson" will be opening a week from today with a gala premiere on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater. The occasion will be doubly gala by reason of the presence of Ruth Hussey, one of the stars of the cast.

Our early-week information was that Miss Hussey will include Washington in a series of personal appearances she has been making these past few weeks in the East, as a part of the motion picture industry's cooperation with the Red Cross campaign. It is expected that she will arrive here next Wednesday, presumably early in the day, and remain through Thursday.

One who contributes so charming a performance to "Tennessee Johnson" must in the very nature of things be an exceedingly charming young woman.

Just to jog memory once again, it may be recalled that Miss Hussey's is not the only memorable portrayal in this fine pictorial treatment of a worthy subject. Van Heflin's assumption of the title role is by way of being a personal triumph for a young actor who finds himself, much of the way, in keen competition with the abundant and seasoned talents of Lionel Barrymore in the role of Thaddeus Stevens—upon whose character, incidentally, new light also is thrown. Not a member of the cast, as a matter of fact, allows any taint of mediocrity to show through the high finish of the film.

Rich Honors and Awards

Lest we seem to have stepped off on the wrong foot in including "Yankee Doodle Dandy" among the major films currently on view, that resounding tribute to dyed-in-the-wool Americanism and its greatest exponent in the American Theater reopens on the screen at the Metropolitan tomorrow. No need to offer the reminder that the Academy awarded James Cagney the Oscar for the best male performance of the year in the title role of George M. Cohan, but the full scope of "Yankee Doodle's" hit in Washington is worth recapitulating. This biography of the late "song-and-dance man" played three weeks at advanced prices at the Earle and Ambassador theaters prior to its general release as a popular-priced entertainment. Its total combined running time in the Capital now has run itself up into the imposing aggregate of 10 weeks. By the time he gets through, Jimmy Cagney will have a handful of attendance records dangling from his belt, in addition to the statuette on his mantelpiece.

And it is Manager Sidney Hoffman who wishes the few who may not heretofore have seen it, and the many who will want to see it again, to know that "Mrs. Miniver," the film that won the Academy "Oscar" for Greer Garson and the best supporting award for Teresa Wright, will be revived at the Kennedy Theater tomorrow, Friday, March 12. "Mrs. Miniver," like the same star's current "Random Harvest," is a picture that will stand reseeing as many times as that can conveniently be arranged by the individual.

The Messrs. Kogod and Burka are up to their old tricks. Comes word that on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, their Atlas Theater, which is by way of being out at Thirteenth and H Streets Northeast, will be dusting off its stage to make way for the original Cappy Barra Boys, in an interval of "in person" diversion. These are the "Five Gentlemen of the Harmonica" who scored in Deanna Durbin's picture, "Mad About Music," and before that had rung up a nice repute for themselves with Horace Heidt and His Musical Knights, in "Pot o' Gold." Their local engagement—what with radio commitments and the like—so Frank Boucher tells me, is strictly limited to the first three days of next week. So now you know.

First Unit Gets Going Today

The first company organized by the New York committee of the American Branch of Entertainment National Service Association (ENSA) takes off for Canada this afternoon at 3 o'clock. It is known as "A for Aces" and is a variety show with several sketches written by Noel Coward. The unit was assembled and rehearsed in New York and includes Gina Malo, Phyllis Clare, Robert Chisholm, Leslie Barrie, Dawn and Russell and Pierre de Caillaux. Even more renowned is the New York committee sponsoring the project—Gilbert Miller, Gertrude Lawrence, John Golden, Vinton Freedley, John C. Wilson and Forrest Haring. Present plans call for a second unit, recruited from hundreds of British and Canadian volunteers eager to join up in a month or so.

A distinguished visitor in Washington yesterday was our fellow-Hoosier, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., sometimes mistakenly referred to as the "Czar" of the movies. I am profoundly grateful to him for a gesture of warm and sympathetic friendship that I shall always cherish.

Much can be found in the Little Theater revival of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" which is particularly applicable to the helter-skelter existence of the times. As touchingly presented on the screen as it was on the stage, Wilder's poetic reminder of the beauty and wonder of normal, every-day existence is touched with a universality that strikes home forcefully in a swiftly paced era, where life flits by and vanishes like a puff of smoke in a breeze.

Set in the horse-and-buggy days of, in reality, not so long ago, "Our Town" is the simple narration of birth, death and marriage in the town of Grovers Corners. As the progressive sequences of life, with its oft-overlooked but wonderful fundamentals, pass on, the philosophic commentary of the author is brought to the audience through the words of one of the town's citizens, who also serves as narrator.

Peopled with the familiar, lovable characters found in any small American community, it is, in brief, the drama of life running its full cycle.

The Webbs and the Gibbs are the two families of the New Hampshire town whom Wilder uses as the medium to express his story of homely, everyday things. The drama of the story lies in such daily occurrences as the delivery of the town's newspaper and its morning milk, the countless preparations of breakfasts, lunches and dinners.

There is dramatic impact in the continuity of these little events of life which make up a span of years and ends in the inevitable. The treatment of the film still has the effect of the unusual with the narrator leading the way and informing the audience of the happenings and transitions in Grovers Corners.

Frank Craven, coauthor of the screen play, is seen in the dual role which he created on the stage; that of Mr. Morgan who runs the drug store, and the narrator. Martha Scott and William Holden are the young lovers; Fay Bainter and Thomas Mitchell, Dr. and Mrs. Gibbs; Beulah Bondi and Guy Kibbee, Mr. and Mrs. Webb, and Stuart Erwin, Doro Merande, Philip Wood and Ruth Toby in lesser roles.

RUTH HUSSEY

as she will be seen in the role of Eliza McCardle, destined to become Mrs. Andrew Johnson, wife of the President of the United States, in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Tennessee Johnson," scheduled to have its premiere in Loew's Capitol Theater on Thursday, March 18. Miss Hussey, it is announced, will be present in Washington for that gala occasion

HEDDA HOPPER

So Hubby Took a Bow!

Hollywood, Calif., March 10.—Just to prove how your subconcious mind can beat you to the punch, Gene Tierney had this line to speak in "Heaven Can Wait": "Don't think my marriage has been all bad. I've had my moments." What she really said was: "Don't think my marriage has been bad at all, I've had more moments than most women can boast of." Take a bow, Oleg Cassini. . . . Baby Dumpling, from the "Blondie" series, is testing at Warner's for a contract. I wonder what will happen if he gets it and they want Dumpling for the next "Blondie." It may be another case of Rita Hayworth, who finds herself without a voice since her voice, Nan Gwynne, is making such a hit in New York on her own.

GENE TIERNEY

Too Bad

The Duncan sisters finally get their wish to do a picture version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" — but here's the catch. Only the voices of Topsy and Eva will be heard, and they'll be attached to George Pal's puppetoons . . . Constance Moore, who's separated from her husband, Johnny Maschio, says that if she'd remained here and continued with her career and not gone to New York for a play, there would have been no separation; but that the many months apart made it impossible for them to continue their lives together. Which makes me wonder what our soldiers are going to think when they read a statement like that. In these days of war, it behooves actresses to be careful about what they say.

Luck of the Navy

Sailor Mathew Yuricich from Ohio had himself a time on the set of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady." Betty Grable, at the canteen the night before had invited him to the studio, and there he was at dawn, walking up and down in the rain so as not to miss her. He spent the day talking with Betty, Bob Young, Menjou, Reggie Gardiner and that pretty Virginia Grey. Betty was an eyeful in an old-fashioned bustled black gown with an 18-inch waist, blue gloves and a cape made of horsehair braid, which was pretty—but said Betty, "You'd think I was doing penance for something. It's like wearing a hair shirt. I feel like the old Christian martyrs."

Frank Case writes from New York. "Our streets are full of French sailors—young and naive, wearing their blue tams with those cunning little red pom-pons. One of them lost his pom-pon, went into Saks—could they find one for him? They did—free. America's gift to France—merci beau-coup! Frenchman departed happily. Next day, 50 more sailors showed up there, all with their pom-pons missing! They're wide-eyed over the Empire State building and Radio City, but especially over hot water and soap being free in hotel washrooms, and a free wipe on a roller towel."

Never a Dull Moment

Some contrast in Lloyd Nolan's acting life. He's playing that bad man Touhy. Now Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer wants him for "Army Chaplain." . . . Like Diamond Jim Brady, Eugene Pallette, who plays a meat packer in "Heaven Can Wait," wears dangling from the center of a gold watch chain a huge gold steer. He says it's easy to get picture jobs today. "Instead of the old apple, I give my directors a ham and a pound of butter." . . . When pretty Marguerite Chapman went marketing, she stood open-mouthed while a hoity-toity female refugee ordered a shoulder of beef, a rib roast, some sausages and calves liver, and said to the man, "You'll deliver it?" "No, madame," replied he. "Well, isn't that your horse standing outside?" "No," said he, "I just sold you the horse."

That beloved actor, William Farnum, will dramatize many characters from "The Robe," best seller, by Lloyd Douglas, tomorrow night in the Wilshire Methodist Church. It's a benefit for the care of Chinese children. You'll remember that Frank Ross paid $100,000 for the rights of the book.

Little Scrap of Paper Speaks Strange Jargon of the Lots

By Melrose Gower

Hollywood, March 10.—The "call sheet" is Hollywood's Bible.

The call sheet is a piece of white paper 9 inches wide by 13 inches long, containing an assistant director's instructions for the day's filming of a motion picture.

The call sheet lists the names of all actors and actresses "on call" to work each day, names the location where filming will take place, describes the sets, states the exact time work will start on each scene, outlines the day's demands on all studio departments.

The call sheet is worth more than a film star's paycheck. No star would get a paycheck if the instructions on the call sheet didn't make it possible to film big movies accurately, swiftly, right on schedule. Directors and their assistants, department heads, stars, feature players and extras carry the day's call sheet stuffed in their pockets. The call sheet is pinned to countless bulletin boards, where he who runs may read.

Greek to the Layman

To the studio visitor, however, the call sheet is a mumbo jumbo, meaning nil. It might as well be written in Sanskrit, for all the information it contains. Its cabalistic, cryptic instructions, phrased in the strange language employed by movie technical men, would baffle even that noted Washington cipher expert, David A. Salmon, chief of the State Department's division of communications and records.

Samples? Certainly.

A recent call sheet on RKO-Radio's latest shake-and-shiver screen offering, "The Leopard Man," bore Assistant Director Bill Dorfman's request to the property department for "the black cat." That sounds like a normal request for a cute little trained feline to do its tricks in a living-room scene. But the request had Margo, Dennis O'Keefe, Jean Brooks and all the other members of the cast shaking in their boots. They knew, as everyone else in the industry knows, that "the black cat" is 100 pounds of spitting, snarling fury, "Dynamite," the only trained (if you care to designate him) black panther in existence.

Not Partially Disabled

A call sheet for the new Fred Astaire-Jean Leslie starring picture, "The Sky's the Limit," bore the following memo from Ruby Rosenberg to the casting office:

"Will notify if part of Mr. Melton will work."

That was all. No reference was made as to what part of Mr. Melton might be out of order. But the casting office understood immediately that it would be told later whether or not to call the actor assigned to play the role of the gentleman referred to.

Sam Ruman, assistant director on "The Fallen Sparrow," in which John Garfield and Maureen O'Hara are currently emoting, listed on his call sheet a request to the special effects department for "man to blow smoke rings."

That doesn't mean, however, a man peculiarly gifted with that odd parlor accomplishment. The man who blows smoke rings for a movie scene is a technician who fills with smoke a can containing a round hole in the top—then, tapping the bottom scientifically, he produces the most beautiful smoke rings ever seen!

Their Sound Deceptive

"Best boy and gaffer on set at 7 a. m." was an instruction on the call sheet of the Frank Ross production, "A Lady Takes a Chance," costarring Jean Arthur and John Wayne. Well, folks, a "gaffer" is the head electrician on a picture, the "best boy" is his assistant.

"Six street women" were requested one day on the call sheet of "This Land Is Mine." Director Jean Renoir didn't want six women of easy virtue to bobnob with Charles Laughton and Maureen O'Hara; he merely was asking for six feminine extras as background pedestrians.

Assistant Director Harry Scott's instruction on a call sheet for "Gildersleeve's Bad Day" required "four grips on set." No suitcases were in evidence, however, when filming started—the answer being that a "grip" is a husky laborer.

The call sheet for Ginger Rogers' present picture, "Lady in The Dark," asked one day for "two s. b.'s to open big doors." Sash—an "s. b." means a "stand-by."

Soldiers and sailors, marines and fliers develop strange expressions during military service. But these zanies on the Hollywood front—they're out of this world!

To Return as Star of Brilliant Play

ETHEL BARRYMORE

as she appears upon her first entrance on the stage in Emlyn Williams' splendid play, "The Corn Is Green," ticketed to play a return engagement at the National Theater the week of Monday, March 29. The original cast seen with Miss Barrymore on the same stage in the prior-to-Broadway engagement again will support the star in her triumphant performance in the most successful play of her long and distinguished career

Health Specialist

the great health conservationist, takes the first precaution after eight hours of sound sleep—orange juice, no doubt. Anyhow, it all seems a vast refutation of "The Sky's the Limit," the title of his next picture!

First Screen Kiss For Henry Aldrich

Henry Aldrich got his first screen kiss the other day.

It was a kiss for which many a star would have given the shirt off his back, coming as it did from the lips of lovely Frances Gifford.

Frances plays the role of a Hollywood movie queen in Paramount's "Henry Aldrich Gets Glamour," starring Jimmy Lydon as the mischief-maker. In the comedy she is a sort of Dorothy Lamour who falls in love with Henry and goes to the small town of Centerville to see her sweetie-pie.

Henry is the sweetie-pie. He waits for his queen and receives the gentle osculation from her as she alights from her train at the depot.

For several Aldrich adventures Jimmy Lydon has played opposite more than a few pretty young ladies, but nary a kiss did he get. This tangible sign of affection, which helps Henry become glamorous, is a turning point in his adolescent career.

Military Maid

ANN MILLER

costarred with Dick Purcell and William Wright, with a host of top bands and entertainers in support, in Columbia's forthcoming production of "Reveille With Beverly." You'll be seeing it in due course

Henreid Flunks Jitterbug Test

Hollywood.—Even the motion pictures couldn't make a jitterbug out of Paul Henreid. The star of "Casablanca" was asked to "cut a rug" with Ida Lupino and Olivia de Havilland for a comedy number in Warner Brothers' "Thank Your Lucky Stars." For a week, he trained furiously. He wound up with charley horses, bruised toes and a sprained back. But still not in the groove.

George Tobias, fresh from shooting down Jap Zeros in "Air Force," has been substituted. He says he's been jitterbugging with accents for years. He's willing to try it with his feet.

Ben Bard Back in Films

Hollywood. — Ben Bard, who hasn't appeared on the screen since playing the "heavy" with the late Jean Harlow in "The Girl From Missouri" in 1934, is back in films.

Once a leading man and noted character actor, he retired to operate the Ruth Roland estate, found the Ben Bard Playhouse, cradle of many actors. Now in RKO-Radio's thriller, "The Leopard Man," he plays a police captain, called on to solve mysterious murders of several lovelies.

"I hope," said Ben, "the role also will solve the way to come back."

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Enigmatic Characters Elegantly Cast

Hollywood, March 10 (INS).—If ever a title had oomph its "George, the Devil and Rosie," a magazine story by John Collier just snagged by Warners to star Humphrey Bogart, Errol Flynn and Ann Sheridan, the original oomph gal. In the order named, Bogey will play George, Ann is Rosie, and Errol will play the devil in this comedy fantasy with Hades as the locale.

HUMPHREY BOGART

Teaming Errol and Ann in a movie is smart business on the part of Jack Warner. The rumor persists that these two have fallen hard for each other and certainly it wasn't entirely the charm of Mexico City that kept Errol planing down there so regularly while Ann was on vacation there.

Just heard that Nancy Kelly put her name on a Bill Thomas contract while Bill was in New York showing Paramount bigwigs "Aerial Gunner" and "Alaska Highway," the two latest movie operas made by him and his partner, Bill Pine. "Guess we did all right," Bill opined, "for we got an added bankroll to him 'Tornado' and signed Nancy who has been on the stage in 'Guest in the House' and 'Flare Path' for the lead. Marie McDonald, the pride," added Bill, "and Gail Russell, whom you named the Hedy Lamarr of Santa Monica, are also in our new show." Nancy hasn't made a movie in about a year and Bill says she is dying to get back to Hollywood.

Mighty interesting reading is the life story Mark Kelly is writing on Jimmie Johnston, Broadway fight promoter and big shot at Madison Square Garden. The Saturday Evening Post will publish it under the title of "The Boy Bandit of Broadway." Dapper Jimmie Johnston was a prominent figure in the lush days of fighting when Tex Rickard, Jack Dempsey, Gene Tunney, Carnera and others were in the sports headlines. The story sounds like a natural for Jimmie Cagney, this year's Academy Award winner, whose "Yankee Doodle Dandy," another biography, gave him the prize. In fact, Bill Cagney has asked to read it as soon as Mark gets his enormous volume of material in shape.

If Paramount can get both Katharine Hepburn and Rosalind Russell for "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay," the Cornelia Otis Skinner-Emily Kimbrough best seller, then say I—they've got something. Getting either of these gals, much less the duet, is any producer's dream but as a wag at Para said: "well, we can dream, can't we?" Buddy de Sylva isn't dreaming, however, in those talks he has been having with Katie about his story of two gals who go to see Paris when their hearts were young and gay. One of the roles, he insists, is right up La Hepburn's street. Well, the tempestuous lady will have plenty of time to make up her mind about the script because she has a movie date with M.-G.-M. to fulfill first.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: K. T. Stevens and Lieut. Richard Behr of the Army are a very attractive pair; Red Skelton went for a tour of the Army camps and who did he take—Mrs. Red, no less—who may be out of his life romantically, but definitely in in a business way; Claire Trevor, who has lost pounds and looks like a different girl, was at the Academy dinner with Van Johnson. If Claire only knew how much better she looks without all that superfluous weight she would never let it catch up with her again; a certain movie actor knows how to keep his cook happy. He has taken her out three nights in a row and bought her dinner. Maybe it is better than having her cook it! Ginny Simms is comforting Pat Nerney during these evenings he's moping for Anne Shirley; Richard Carlson is nursing a black eye after tangling with a professional boxer, Bob Steele, in a movie scene; Ann Sheridan, believe it or not, had to teach the hired man how to milk the cow she just bought. Anne learned the fine art in Texas; Jack Benny is worrying friends with a bad cold he cannot seem to shake. His M. D. encourages him to believe that after two weeks rest he will be as good as new.

Too Authentic For Dated Scene

Hollywood.—Director Herman Shumlin quickly threw out two authentic details placed by property men at the base of a set construed to represent the Washington Monument for a scene in Warner Brothers' "Watch on the Rhine."

The details were two signs. One said "Service Men Free." The other said "No Photographs." The signs were precisely correct, having been constructed from photographs taken last week.

But "Watch on the Rhine" takes place in 1940.

Capital Store Shelves 11% Better Stocked

By S. Oliver Goodman

Merchandise on hand in Washington department stores at the end of January was 11 per cent heavier than on the same date last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. In the entire Fifth Reserve district, stores were 14 per cent better stocked at the end of January.

The bank survey also noted that Washington customers were paying their bills more rapidly. Collections on open accounts at the end of the month were 53 per cent of the bills due at the beginning of the period. In January, 1942, only 45 per cent of such accounts were paid.

Orders placed by local stores to replenish their shelves were 28 per cent heavier in January than in the same month last year.

As reported previously, sales of Washington department stores in January were 5 per cent less than in the same month last year.

New Brokerage Service

The largest member firm of the New York Stock Exchange has announced the inauguration of a wide educational campaign to make available to prospective investors precise information about a company before commitments were made in its securities.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane is advertising an offer to supply annual reports of corporations to non-registered stockholders, as well as others contemplating buying securities, so they can study all phases of the company before purchasing.

This action by the big firm, worked out as an additional educational feature in its program of services for investors, came only a short time after Emil Schram, president of the Exchange, publicly expressed concern over recent heavy activity in low-priced stocks listed on the Exchange.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane, brought into existence through various mergers, maintains offices in 86 cities throughout the Nation, including Washington.

Transit Heads Re-elected

Stockholders of the Capital Transit Company at their annual meeting yesterday re-elected all directors. John H. Hanna was re-elected chairman of the board.

Directors re-elected Edward D. Merrill as president and all other officers were named to serve another term.

Hog Prices Break On Ceiling Report

Chicago, March 10 (AP).—Live hogs suffered the widest break in several months today with early sales 25 cents lower and later trade as much as 50 cents off from yesterday's averages. The extreme top was $15.60, with the bulk of choice medium and heavyweights selling between $15.25 and $15.40.

Reports that a ceiling might be placed on live hogs and comparatively liberal receipts of 14,000 head contributed to the downturn. Large packers took an additional 6000 head direct.

Sudden Awakening

Minneapolis.—Kenneth Olson took a little nap. Suddenly he was awakened by smoke, and:

Hit the floor, kicked out a window; climbed out on a ledge; yelled bloody murder; was rescued by firemen. "Is the fire out?" he asked. The firemen led him to his kitchen, there they pointed to the source of the smoke—a roast which had burned as he slept.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Ramspeck Group To Ask More Control

More rigid control over the hiring of additional Federal workers will be demanded by the Ramspeck Committee, which opened hearings yesterday on its investigation of personnel practices. The Civil Service Commission has no authority whatsoever to question orders its receives from agencies for more employes. It must fill the orders, if it can, and ask no questions. This was emphasized time and again yesterday by Commissioner Arthur S. Flemming. However, the official hinted that he would recommend at a later hearing some form of joint Civil Service-Budget Bureau control over the hiring of new employes when he was pounded by questions from committee members.

KLUTTZ

To the obvious pleasure of the 14 committee members, Flemming pointed out that the rate of hiring in Government had dropped sharply since the Ramspeck inquiry was ordered by Congress. In 1942, the Federal payroll showed an average monthly net increase of 100,000 employes. In January, the net increase dropped to 47,000 and in the District a net decrease of 2000 was reported. This is the biggest decrease here in years which Flemming hinted showed a "new trend." When pressed for an explanation, the commissioner implied the Budget Bureau would shortly announce a retrenchment program which would compel many Federal agencies to cut their staffs. That program was revealed here Sunday.

From the figures Flemming gave to the committee it was clear to anyone that no real personnel cuts can be made in the Government unless the War and Navy Departments are hit heavy and that's entirely unlikely. In fact, Flemming testified that the departments plan to hire several hundred thousand more civilians this year. For example, in June, 1940, War had 137,318 civilians. On January 1, the number was 1,257,014, a jump of 815 per cent. In the same period Navy leaped from 117,981 to 559,580, an increase of 374 per cent. All other agencies—new and old—increased from 758,000 to 994,000, a rise of 31 per cent.

Many persons have tried to compare this war with World War I and Flemming used statistics to show how foolish the attempts are. The Civil Service official showed that in certain Army and Navy establishments a total of 125,000 civilians were employed in World War I. On January 1 the number was 948,000 and the anticipated peak this year is 1,180,000, an increase of 232,000. And that isn't all the anticipated jump. The increase in civilians is enormous in itself—nearly 1,900,000 since the emergency—but placements in Government work are a bit fantastic. Since the emergency 3,549,634 have been made. The average during 1942 was 230,000 a month compared to the commission's peacetime average of 60,000 annually. And it's getting worse. In January, 237,000 placements were made to bring about a net increase of 47,000. The remainder was made to fill vacancies. Flemming will continue his testimony today.

WAVES would be placed in Civil Service jobs under a bill reported favorably yesterday by the House Naval Affairs Committee. Navy Assistant Secretary Bard told the committee that Civil Service was unable to furnish the department with adequate clerical help. Many of the WAVES are now in clerical jobs but they have replaced officers and enlisted personnel. Thousands of additional WAVES will be brought here if the bill becomes law and the chances are it will. Navy tried this same system during World War I and it caused a lot of headaches but it has plenty of trouble now with its Civil Service people.

The House Civil Service Committee will hold another meeting Monday in an effort to report out a pay raise bill. The meeting yesterday got nowhere on the Administration's plan which would raise the salaries of white-collar workers. Insiders predict the committee will recommend continuation of the present overtime pay system with amendments. . . Cabell Phillips, Justice Department press agent, is going to North Africa for Lend-Lease. . . . Leigh Plummer, OPA press agent, is being inducted into the Army. . . . Civil Service has announced an exam for privates for the District Fire Department. Starting salary, $1900.

Bob Barnett has been appointed chairman of the temporary War Manpower Committee that will review draft deferments in Government. Serving with him will be Bernard Gavit, general counsel of War Manpower, and Col. Edward A. Fitzpatrick of the Selective Service System. The first act of this over-all committee will be to inform departments to set up their own Selective Service boards to request deferment for key employes. The temporary committee will review the applications and see that no agency gets out of line. Meantime, the Costello Committee will open hearings on draft-dodging in Government. This House committee hasn't even taken the trouble of reading the Bellamy report on the Government's draft policy. Apparently it's getting ready to smear employes who have been deferred regardless of the season . . . OWI has eliminated or curtailed 309 Government publications and more than 42 million copies of press releases.

Single Men Face Call By March 31

Married Men With Children Not to Be Drafted Before July or August

All of the District's able-bodied, single young men probably will be in uniform by the end of March, but under present conditions, married men with children will not be called until July or August, a spokesman for local Selective Service headquarters told The Post yesterday.

Denying reports that parents will be drafted in June, he added that the later date was announced several weeks ago, to be effective "if present calls continue." Calls from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard have not been increased, so there is no change in the announcement, it was said.

Draft board officials also scoffed at statements that they are operating without statistics showing how many childless married men are available to meet their quotas.

"Complete figures are at our disposal," it was said, "but they are confidential and not available for public scrutiny."

Local boards have not yet begun to reclassify men in the 38-44 age group following the War Manpower Commission's latest ruling, but will begin to do so in a short time.

Victory Sidelights

Officials Disown Plan To Take Cars

The National Automobile Dealers Association last night reported receipt of assurances from high Government officials that no plans are in existence, or under consideration, for the seizure of private automobiles.

The association quoted Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson: "The War Department neither has any plans nor is studying plans to acquire privately-owned automobiles."

And WPB Chairman Donald Nelson: "I agree with you that such a drastic course (seizure of autos) is not necessary at this time and that repeated circulation of reports that such a step will be taken has a disturbing effect on public morale."

The statements were made in reply to communications addressed to the officials by the dealers' group.

Air-Horn Given Tests

A 100 decible air-horn, possibly suitable for summoning volunteer firement in suburban areas in place of the now taboo sirens, was tried out in the Civilian Defense offices in District Building yesterday after most of the employes had left. The horn, which could be driven by either electricity, gasoline or air-pressure, is also being tried out in the Fire Department's repair shops to see if they could be practicably used on fire engines, which the new air-raid signal regulations have also deprived of the traditional sirens.

30,000 Use Pentagon

The population of the Pentagon Building in Arlington, Va., has now reached 30,000, an increase of 10,000 within a few months, the War Department said yesterday.

In making the announcement, the department said that one-half of the personnel depend on buses for transportation and the rest use private cars.

Accidental Deaths In 1941 Cost U. S. 775 Millio

Accidental deaths in the United States during 1941, excluding persons killed by automobiles, cost the Nation, in terms of productive manpower, gross earnings estimated at 775 million dollars, Curtis R. Welborn, secretary of Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc. of Chicago, said last night.

"From a cold-blooded, dollars-and-cents point of view," the speaker told the Washington Safety Society, meeting in the Government Printing Office, "you hard-headed business people know we can't afford to make any greater contributions to this human rubble pile."

Wellborn blamed the accidents on "unconscious sabotage"—represented by the "same old, stringy-haired, snaggle-toothed, hatchet-faced wenches—indifference, ignorance and carelessness."

Italian Prisoner

D. C. Officer Father, but Doesn't Know

Although five cables have been sent through every available channel informed sources could suggest, no one in Washington last night was sure that Second Lieut. Marcellus Christian Hughes, Washington Tank Corps officer now held prisoner by the Italians, had definitely received information of the birth of his son here on February 27.

Lieut. Hughes

The lieutenant is the husband of The Post's society writer, Carolyn Bell, 3803 Alton Place Northwest, from whom information of his capture was withheld until two or three days ago.

First person to hear of Hughes' capture was Miss Bess Christian, an aunt, of 4112 Fourth Street North, Arlington, Va., who has served as secretary for many years to Representative James W. Wadsworth (Republican) of New York.

She learned two weeks ago from Lieutenant Hughes' commanding officer, that he had been captured in North Africa while on patrol duty sometime between January 29 and February 4.

But nobody knows where the camp is in which he is being held prisoner; hence the difficulty in notifying him of the advent of Christian Bell Hughes who, his mother said yesterday, was "doing fine."

A native of Lynchburg, Va., Hughes, 30, was employed by the Treasury Department until he enlisted in the Army in May, 1941. He received his basic training at Camp Knox, Ky., later went to Officer Candidates School, graduating in February, 1942, and was sent overseas the following May. He and Miss Bell, who continues to write under that name, were married in 1939.

Navy May Put 2000 WAVES In Civilian Jobs

The Navy Department may be forced to use from 1000 to 2000 WAVES in posts ordinarily held by civilian personnel in Washington, the Senate Naval Affairs Committee was told yesterday.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph Bard told the legislators at a hearing that the department has had considerable trouble in finding civilians to fill about 20,000 jobs which have been authorized by Congress. He said that it might be necessary to use the uniformed WAVES where civilians were unavailable.

At present, he added, the law forbids the use of the women's service to replace civilian personnel. Although there is no legislation now pending to lift this ban, Bard's proposal was given the indorsement of the committee as a "matter of expediency."

The estimate that 2000 of the WAVES might be needed was made to the press by Capt. H. G. Hopwood, director of the planning and contracts division of the Bureau of Personnel after the hearing.

Bard also asked the committee to remove a limitation in the Naval appropriation bill prohibiting the payment of salaries higher than $5000 a year to men drafted from civilian life to help handle war contracts.

The department has avoided the use of dollar-a-year men, he explained, and is hard put to find adequately qualified lawyers and business experts at $5000 a year.

11 Marmosets Join D. C. Zoo As Donor Turns to Farming

Mrs. Martha G. Hunter of Philadelphia fascinated for eight years by marmosets, raising them successfully when others more often fail, grew constrained to go on a farm to help the war effort.

"These are 11 very fine marmosets," Washington Zoo Director Dr. William M. Mann told her yesterday, bowing in an acquisition of three black tufted and four white tufted marmosets and four tamarins, the latter rare species and with yellow feet. Mrs. Hunter was sorry to part with them; the Zoo was happy to have them; the marmosets, all together in one of the better, newer Zoo apartments, seemed not caring much, one way or the other. The visiting public stared, pleased.

Ten feet across the small-mammal House floor, Scott Tree Kangaroo, born the size of a peanut in early January, now as big as a fair-sized rat, did the unexpected, thrust its head from the pouch of the mother, Emma Kangaroo, to see about the marmoset commotion.

A Post photographer, his camera fixed on the marmosets, was yanked by the coattail and whirling emitted the plaintive cry of the Tree Kangaroo, part of his early training in quick-fire photography, fascinated Emma's baby, and got for Post readers a picture of the year.

The marmosets leaped dandily on the fake limbs of a tree in the cage.

Zoologists said, "We won't say the tamarins are the only ones in captivity in America." It's risky. It invites letters saying "Why really? Well I have two in my backyard." No one would say they weren't extraordinary, great additions for the Zoo which came because the war compelled Mrs. Hunter to abandon a hobby she had accepted as a challenge. Marmosets, she was told while working at the big Philadelphia Zoo nine years ago, are hard to rear.

She reared them—for a time in a city apartment, feeding them mixed vegetables and fruit in the morning; raw meat and pablum mixed with fruit in the afternoons; outdoors, in summer, they devoured insects, doting on Japanese beetles. They thrived in outdoor, wool-lined boxes. They were brought here yesterday in carrying cases on a train. Many travelling children peeped in at them.

Alert, watchful, they will probably be the first to see the young kangaroo scramble from the pouch where nature made him climb following birth. A kangaroo's first weeks are furtive. Their births don't reverberate across the Zoo's hills and hollows. Unbeknownst, generally, to zoo keepers the tiny creature crawls through the mother's fur and into the pouch where it feeds.

Early this week someone had said "I saw a kangaroo's head thrust out and then disappear into Emma's pouch." They knew that a tiny, fragile life was growing among all the other coarse, wild flesh on the hillsides, and Emma herself, if one looked long enough, had assumed maternal eyes. The father's name is Jake.

Sharp Rise In Demand For Milk Seen

Outlook Worries Retailers Because Of District's Dwindling Supply

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

Local milk retailers yesterday were faced with an anticipated increased demand for milk amounting to as much as 20 per cent, due, they said, to an expected influx of more war workers and the greater demand for milk as an unrationed food.

Steadily dwindling dairy herds in the Washington milk shed, proper, increases the problem thrust upon them, officials pointed out.

At present Washingtonians consume 100,000 gallons of fresh milk a day. The city's milk shed is able to produce 90,000 gallons and it is necessary to import from other sections, normally feeding other markets, the needed 10,000 gallons.

New Sources Sought

Dairy officials believe that within the very near future there will be a demand for 120,000 gallons a day and they are now anxiously seeking a source from which they can obtain the milk and keep up the high standard customary in the city.

A check of current publications from nearby counties yesterday, revealed that in Montgomery and Howard Counties alone there were offered for sale a total of 459 milch cows during the present week. Most of them are being sold at public auction.

Local dairymen are aware of the situation and they said they have tried to ascertain if the cows are being retained in milk production and in the Washington area, but with poor success.

However, one of them pointed to what he thought a significant fact when he said he had been informed that the old fashioned meat wagon had been revived in some sections and that hucksters, with no ceiling prices to bother them, were now putting in appearances where they had not been seen before.

One of the largest dairymen said there had not been an adequate supply of milk in the Washington milk shed since July and that the 10,000 gallons imported here now comes from the New York areas where the demand has decreased. However, it has now developed that the anticipated 20,000 gallons daily that will be needed in Washington shortly cannot be obtained from the New York area and dairymen say it will have to be hauled from a greater distance with a consequent greater freight bill.

All Report Losses

All milk retailers questioned said they had lost some dairy farms within the past few months and they expected they would lose more. One had lost as many 12 of the 800 farms supplying them with milk. He expected to lose a few more and feared he might lose as many as 10 per cent.

A partial solution offered was that farmers be encouraged to milk their poor-producing cows, those giving but a gallon of milk a day, instead of selling the animal for beef.

The accelerated slaughter of young heifers, reflected by the comparative ease with which veal may be bought, is posing a major postwar problem, dairymen said, in that this young stock will be needed in replacing Europe's herds killed to feed Nazis.

Virginia milk producers are following in the same path as those in Maryland in disposing of their herds.

Just recently J. A. Wheeler, of Browns Chapel, who had been a dairy farmer for 25 years disposed of 100 cows. He had been sending 300 gallons of milk a day to Marcey Brothers Dairy in Arlington, which supplies some of the milk consumed in this city.

Virginia dairymen said they constantly hear of others who are threatening to sell out.

Adds to Labor Problem

Local retailers were asked if the process of homogenizing the milk—breaking up the fat globules in order to keep the cream evenly distributed—was adding greatly to the cost of the product. They said the dollars and cents cost of the process was not great, but that it did increase their manpower problem.

In addition to milk producers, other types of farmers in the area are tending more and more to dispose of their holdings. In Frederick County alone there will be offered for sale during the month of April 100 farms.

There is always a seasonal turnover in farm ownership in the spring, but this year it has become noticeably greater, observers said.

To meet the rising shortage of farm labor in Maryland, officials of the regional office of the Farm Security Administration are recruiting farm help from subsistence areas in other States, it was announced yesterday.

John D. Leatherman, State director for the FSA, announced that 41 men recruited in West Virginia recently have been placed on Maryland farms after completing a short course of training at the University of Maryland.

Flies Around the World

DAD'S BACK—Col. Lewis R. Parker, first commanding officer of Bolling Field to fly around the world, returned to his air base last night reporting a "mechanically uneventful flight" that took him across more than a score of countries. He piloted the plane that carried Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces, from Casablanca to China. He was greeted on his return by the Official Army Air Forces Band, Mrs. Parker, two of their children, John, 4, and Jean, 9, and air-base officers

Lenten Season Inaugurated By Ash Wednesday Services

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Wartime Washington yesterday took time out to pray at traditional Ash Wednesday services, as Lent began throughout Christendom.

The weather cooperating, crowds attended services in Catholic and Protestant churches throughout the day and night, and churchgoers will continue to participate in Lenten programs from now until Easter—April 25, the latest date on which it has fallen in 20 years.

For the Roman Catholic Church, Lent began at masses with blessing of ashes and the placing of a cross of ashes on worshippers' foreheads by the priests, intoning, the liturgy.

"Remember man that thou are dust and to dust thou shalt return."

Epiphany Services

More than 1000 persons of divers faiths and walks of life, including many downtown business and professional folk, filed into century-old Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest, for the opening of its daily noonday Lenten services.

They heard Dr. Charles W. Sheerin, rector, in his sermon describe Lent as a time of "redirecting ourselves from earthly goals and barriers and finding new freedom based on spiritual values."

In his announcements, the clergymen extended an invitation to downtown workers who attend the noonday service and generally carry lunches, to eat in the parish hall's Willard Room. Luncheon also is being served in the hall, Tuesdays through Friday, during Lent, at a nominal charge.

Laymen Assist

Several Episcopal laymen who are helping to arouse interest in the noonday service project among fellow-employes took up the offerings yesterday at Epiphany.

They were H. Lawrence Choate, St. Alban's, president of the Potomac Assembly, Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Lieut. Bert Sheldon, Epiphany, Capitol police; C. A. Freeman, Our Saviour Church, a Federal worker; Harrison Parkman, Epiphany, Federal worker; D. H. Reynolds, St. Mary's, and W. F. Yelverton, Christ Church, both of the Machinists' Institute; George Beatty, Epiphany, landscape gardener; C. H. Durand, Epiphany, Federal employe, and William Moore, A. Collyngton, Edward Stellwagen and John Mackenzie, all of Epiphany. The Rev. Vincent C. Franks, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Richmond, will preach today and tomorrow at 12 noon at Epiphany.

Washington Cathedral

In his message at the Washington Cathedral yesterday, the Rev. W. Curtis Draper, acting canon precentor, made a plea that in face of the present world calamity, this period be more than "just another Lent" to us.

"In these times of stress, when we are looking for wisdom and advice from the church, the church says again, as it did in that first century: 'Prepare ourselves for God.'"

Highlight of the Lutheran Ash Wednesday commemoration was the initial appearance of the Rev. L. Ralph Tabor, new pastor of historic Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle. Mr. Tabor, former pastor of Baltimore's Third Lutheran Church, spoke on "Spirit of the Prayer," launching a Lenten sermon series on "Toward Understanding the Lord's Prayer." He will be installed as pastor Sunday at 8 p. m.

Several community-wide Lenten programs were inaugurated. Dr. Bernard Braskamp, pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, addressed the Southeast churches' Lenten service at the Penn Theater, 650 Pennsylvania Avenue, and the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Navy Yard Parish, speaks today at 12 p. m.

Dr. Harry W. Burgan, pastor of Hamline Methodist Church, preached at Sixth Presbyterian Church at the first of series of comunity Wednesday evening Lenten services.

Worshipers of St. Gabriel's Catholic Church, Grant Circle Northwest, heard the Right Rev. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen open a Lenten sermon series on "Peaceful Thoughts in Wartime."

The Washington Federation of Churches will launch a series of weekly Lenten services today from 5:30 to 6 p. m. at Epiphany Church, with Dr. J. Warren Hastings, minister of National City Christian Church, Thomas Circle, as the first speaker. Chevy Chase churches will join in services at Chevy Chase Baptist Church, where the speaker will be Dr. Homer Clifford Richmond, pastor of Chevy Chase Methodist Church.

City News in Brief

Police last night were searching for the hit-run driver who struck and seriously injured Patrolman Frank Strader, 31, of Arlington, Va., attached to the Seventh Precinct.

Detailed to the British Embassy shortly before midnight Tuesday, Strader was crossing Massachusetts Avenue Northwest to a patrol box on the opposite side of the street. An eastbound auto hit him, inflicting possibly a fractured skull. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital where his condition was said to be undetermined. Two women attached to the embassy's clerical staff took off their coats to cover Strader as he awaited removal to the hospital.

Psychologists to Meet

The American Psychological Association will meet tonight at 8 o'clock at McMahon Hall, Catholic University. Dr. Goodwin Watson will speak on "Is There to Be a Profession of Social Engineering?" Dr. Max Meenes, Howard University, will draw a "Comparison of Stereotypes of Negro College Students in 1935 and 1942" and Dr. Thomas V. Moore will discuss "Bibliotherapy."

Address on Australia

The Rev. James G. Murtaugh of Catholic University, associate editor of The Advocate, of Melbourne, Australia, will speak on the Washington Catholic Radio Hour broadcast over WWDC today at 8:05 p. m. His theme will be: "Australia—the Land of Militant Catholics." The Boy Choristers of Immaculate Conception School will sing. The Rev. John K. Cartwright, rector of Immaculate Conception Church, will conduct the broadcast.

Way to Cut Ambulance Delay Sought

Commissioners May Assign Control of All Dispatching To One Person

Tightening up of the system for dispatching emergency ambulances may be the Commissioners' means of preventing admitted delays in such service, if they adopt the more orobable of the suggestions offered yesterday by Traffic Inseptcor Arthur E. Miller.

Miller's primary suggestion was to increase the present emergency fleet of four ambulances by purchase or transfer, but he added that this would be expensive and "might not be possible at this time, due to priorities on equipment, and lack of personnel."

As an alternative, he recommended that all responsibility for dispatching the ambulances be centered in one person, who would be on duty at the Central Bureau but not at the switchboard. This employe would determine whether an ambulance was really needed. If the decision was affirmative, he would then be held fully responsible for prompt dispatching of the ambulance and for exact recording of details of the calls received.

Lack of Control

"The cases of ambulance delay which I have cited, and others I have heard of, seem to indicate that the lack of control over the ambulances by someone is the dominating factor," Miller said.

This proposal reflects the difficulties related by Miller in his investigation of two recent cases where an excessive time elapsed before ambulances arrived at scenes of accidents. In his reports on these cases, Miller encountered so much divided responsibility and poor memory of sequence of events, so many discrepancies in records and timings that his final report on the half-hour delay in sending an ambulance to the scene of an accident at Eleventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, March 1, only tentatively fixes the responsibility for the delay, and that on three possible persons.

"There are probably numerous other cases similar to those I have related, but these indicate the many discrepancies, derelictions and errors which need study and correction," Miller said.

Procedure Suggested

Miller also suggested as means of eliminating these derelictions that:

"The Commissioners or Health Department have a stricter contract with the hospitals to insure adequate, prompt and efficient ambulance service.

"A definite system be established at the two hospitals (Casualty and Emergency) whereby the person accepting calls will always know immediately whether or not an ambulance is available, and if so, the call be treated most expeditiously.

"An agreement be worked out between the health department superintendents of the hospitals, coroner and the police department whereby some doctor will always be available to respond to pronounce deaths, instead of using the doctor on an ambulance.

"A health department doctor visit indigent persons, not seriously ill, instead of sending ambulances.

"Two-way radio sets be installed in all public ambulances."

Operate on Contracts

At present the District has contracts with the two hospitals for use of the two emergency ambulances at each institution. Miller commented that apparently the fees paid are not attractive enough to the hospital, "and as a result the ambulance will not be sent on anything but urgent cases, and not a great distance on these." He stated that records show that most runs are within 2½ miles of the hospitals.

During one year, Miller said, there were 11,000 runs from Casualty Hospital, where 65 per cent of the patients were treated on the spot, and 4000 runs from Emergency Hospital, in which only 28 per cent of the patients were treated at the scene of the accident. This, he said, indicated that Emergency did not send an ambulance until it was reasonably sure that a doctor was needed. While this is advantageous in preventing the dispatching of ambulances on needless errands, it might also cause delay, as in the recent cases, Miller said.

The Commissioners probably will act upon Miller's recomendations soon after Commissioner John Russell Young's return from his Florida vacation Friday.

Machinist Hurt in Fall

Falling from a locomotive on which he was working yesterday, Edward Meyers, 34, of 317 A Street Northeast, a machinist for the Washington Terminal Co., suffered a broken right leg and cuts police said. He was admitted to Emergency Hospital. The accident occurred at the Ivy City Roundhouse and Meyers fell, it was said, about 15 feet.

MEMO TO MISS BROWN

Subject:
A Day With Dali

Springtime, or reasonable facsimile of same, brings out the artist in us—sometimes. When our fancies are not occupied with lightly turning to thoughts of love, we may stop and ponder upon an especially beautiful piece of sky or blade of grass and muse, "If I could only paint" Sketching or dipping into water colors is a very gratifying experience, even though viewing the results is frequently otherwise. This is a likely time of year to absorb a few fundamentals or artistic expression so that the beauties of April will be conquered by a knowing brush (or pencil).

The Y. W. C. A., at Seventeenth and K Streets Northwest, offers a perfect course for those who know nothing whatever about the business of creative art. The course delves into water color, charcoal, pastels, lettering and block printing and is principally pointed toward fun and self-expression. Completion of it will probably not qualify you to step into Dali's shoes (if he wears shoes) but it should enable you to produce a few interpretations of Dupont Circle and similar points of interest when the ground is not too muddy to set up your easel. And think how enchanting you could look as you went hiking about the city with paper and a brush in one hand and a glass of water, easel and paints in the other!

Or, if you want extra-timulating competition, investigate the sketching class which the Corcoran School of Art gets into operation every spring. This is not very expensive and is somewhat more intensive than casual.

King-Smith Studio School has a 15-week painting class, complete with models and the works, which is directed toward those with at least pseudo-serious intentions.

The same is true of the drawing and painting classes held at the Corcoran School of Art daily from 7 to 9:45 p. m. These are just about the most stupendous lessons available anywhere in the world—and they cost very little. They're worth some thought—if not action!

If you haven't the steady hand necessary for creating works of art yourself—but are well equipped with an art-loving eye, make the most of the exceptional opportunities available in Washington for seeing the best of the world's paintings.

If you haven't spent hours in the National Gallery of Art, make it your first stop. There are lectures at practically all hours of the day and night—for instance, there are some at 8 p. m. Saturdays or 2:15 and 6:15 Sundays, made to order for the 48-hour a week set. Meet in the Rotunda.

The Corcoran Gallery has a varied selection (with more emphasis on the modern and less on the Early Italian) and from time to time has special exhibits which are really worth seeing.

The Freer Gallery has a permanent collection of some of the most delicate Chinese works of art you've ever seen—or hoped to see—while the Smithsonian Institution generally has two or three collections of special prints which are knock-outs.

Right now (until March 19) there's a superlative exhibit in progress at the Arts Club of Washington—including oils by Arthur B. Daires and brush drawings (very exciting technique) by William H. Calfee.

Get in with the art appreciation class at the Y. W. C. A. (eight weeks for $2) and prepare yourself for some happy Sundays looking at paintings. Then, complete with knowledge and a pair of bunion-proof shoes, you'll be all set to go the rounds.

Almost more fun than gallery-glimpsing is buying prints of a few favorites and mooning over them in private. Look up the prints for sale at the National Gallery for 10 and 25 cents; or similar ones at the Corcoran, or the fine little posteard-size color prints which you can buy for 10 cents at the Whyte Bookshop, Seventeenth and H Streets Northwest. These are foreign-made, not too plentiful, but gems. Get a load of the Van Goghs, for instance. The color is perfect—a miracle for a dime

So whether it's your own masterpiece or someone else's you're enjoying, get a healthy springtime case of art fever going and you'll love life!

SHOP AND RUN—

'Make It Do' for Bachelors Only

By Marianne

Despite the rumors we've heard, we suspect that somewhere there must be some men who haven't an obliging assistant of the feminine gender to sew on a button or brave the crowds to do their shopping for them. So for their benefit we scouted around and took a few notes on the shops and services they offer.

We confess that actually this is an underground movement to enlist you men in our "Make It Do" campaign the purpose of which is to find ways to conserve, repair, and restyle the things we own down to the last patch. Scarcity of materials and manpower shortages (and March 15) make it just plain common sense to do this.

Here are a few "make it do" suggestions that will also help you "live alone and like it." Call the number listed below for shopping information. (Ladies too, since part of your charm is knowing where or how to "fix it.")

Shirt Tale

There's a place that will take the very shirt off your back and do to it all the things that fond mothers used to do. Namely, they'll turn the collar or cuffs for you (and if necessary cut off a piece from the shirt tail and make a new collar); they'll shorten or lengthen sleeves, or take in the "suit shirt" present from a kindly but not size-minded soul.

Hats Off

. . . just for 30 minutes which is all it takes to revive a hat that just looks so sad because it needs to be cleaned and reblocked. This shop has some fancy tricks under its hat in case some new parts are in order, they'll insert new inside or outside hat bands, put a new binding around the brim of your hat, or a new lining inside—which may be all your hat needs to give it a spring look!

If under the influence of "someone" you bought a hat that was very much in style and then dared not to venture forth into public with it on, then have it restyled. For example, if the brim is too wide it can be narrowed.

Fitting and Proper

If there's still a suit hanging in your closet (after all the talk of how it can be made into a woman's suit!) take the best of care of it—wool, you know. We can tell you where you can have alterations done, or if you need buttonholes repaired, a new lining, or the frayed edges of cuffs or coat front turned.

If those saboteurs — moths, nails, cigarettes and the like have left holes or burns in your suits, you can have these re-woven so that the damaged spot is invisible. The sooner this shop can get at the repair job, the less the cost will be.

If You're Complaining—

We have the name of a reliable cleaner that you should put in your address book. One of their services is to waterproof raincoats when they clean them and the charge is about $1.50. They also do things to help remove the shine from trousers. Gather up your favorite ties that need cleaning—15 cents for each tie, seven for $1.

Honorable mention also goes to the shops that clean and repair your leather goods of all kinds. Although you like the mellow used look your gloves, jackets, etc., acquire, they always reach the point where a bit of cleaning will lengthen their life and make them much more presentable!

Deferred Assets

The socks and underwear that are cluttering up the place because they're in need of darning and patching are really assets and should be gathered up and sent to one of the shops we can recommend for this work. Good for your peace of mind and bank balance to make use of them.

Secrets of a Shophound

It's no myth that men hate shopping, but did you know that there are ways and means to accomplish much through the shopping services which most of the department stores offer. Say there's a birthday present on your mind, you can call the shopping service and they'll do your shopping for you! If you're in the store you can ask for a personal shopper who will help you select the article, or if you're a newcomer, acquaint you with the store.

The telephone is NAtional 4206 Extension 324 between 9 and 5:30.

News of the Women's Clubs

By Genevieve Reynolds

What with the Girl Reserves taking over at the Greek War Relief Association Saturday, Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls both observing their thirty-first birthday anniversaries, youth is definitely in the forefront this week.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Greek songs and folk dances presented by the Girl Reserve members will add a spot of color to the Greek exhibit now on display (it's the Greek "Month of March" sponsored by the Greek War Relief Association) daily at the United War Relief Center, 1216 Connecticut Avenue. Girls participating in the program will wear Grecian costumes. Among them will be an authentic one that Miss Elsa Peterson, president of the Y. W. C. A. board of directors, brought home from Athens.

Directing the Girl Reserve program are Mrs. Fred Buschmeyer, Mrs. Edward Stimson and Miss Esther Wilcox, secretary of the Girl Reserve Clubs of the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Donald C. Blaisdell is chairman of the planning committee. Assisting her are Mrs. Ralph Kent, Mrs. Philon A. Philon, Mrs. Bossier, Miss B. Ann Trayfours.

Tuesday 25 students from Miss Libby's School visited the exhibit. A special performance of the Greek Shadow Theater was put on by Miss Trayfours with transparent colored puppets and mannekins. She has been training several of the Girl Reserves in the manipulation of the puppets; so come Saturday afternoon, they will put on the puppet show.

Embroidery Display

Mrs. Truxtun Beale is honorary chairman of the entire Greek exhibit for the month. In addition to the Girl Reserve events Saturday there will be on display antique Greek island embroideries from the George Hewitt Myers collection. Other objects to be seen are rare Greek marble heads lent by private collectors and a genuine reproduction of a Greek room.

In the meantime, the Camp Fire Girls will hold sway at the Children's Museum, 3:30 p. m. Saturday, when they put on a program. Theme will be Indian lore, songs, dances and legends. Chairman of committee on arrangements is Mrs. W. E. Armstrong. Mrs. R. Taylor Drake, former Camp Fire Field executive, is assisting the chairman.

As for the Washington Girl Scouts, they are continuing a series of parties and events in celebration of the thirty-first birthday of the founding of the organization. From a small group of girls that met with Juliette Low in Atlanta, Ga., March 12, the Girl Scout organization in the United States has grown to approximately 700,000. So the Juliette Low Memorial Fund committee is partying 10:30 to noon at the Little House Saturday morning. Then at 6:30 p. m. the Junior Camp May Flather Committee is sponsoring a banquet at Pierce Hall. Miss Joan Yolilk, president of the committee, is in charge of banquet plans. All Girl Scouts who have been to Camp May Flather are invited to attend the dinner in uniform. Incidentally, both Scout events are scheduled for Saturday.

Doings of the Day

Civic Committee of the WOMEN'S CITY CLUB holds monthly forum luncheon, 1 p. m., at the clubhouse, 736 Jackson Place Northwest. Dr. Carroll Reed, first assistant superintendent of D. C. schools, in charge of curriculum revision, leads the discussion, Mrs. H. L. Parkinson, program chairman, introduces speaker and presides. . . . P.-T. A.—Brookland-Noyes—noon luncheons at both schools; John Burroughs Association meeting 1:15 p. m.; Blair-Hayes Association meets 2 p. m. . . . MOTHERS' NATIONAL MEMORIAL CLUB holds short business meeting followed by benefit program, 1:30 p. m., in St. Margaret's Church Parish Hall. Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, president, presides. . . . NATIONAL SYMPHONY FORUM, 8 p. m., at Phillips Memorial Gallery, 1600 Twenty-first Street Northwest. "The Effects of War Upon Music" will be discussed by Ray C. B. Brown, Post music critic; Richard Bales, contemporary composer; Emerson Meyers, artist, president, Washington Music Teachers Association; Miss Katherine Nimitz, head of music division, Public Library, and Mrs. Joseph Miller, representing "Washington Music Lovers." J. P. Hayes is moderator.

Teachers' Pay Bill

A telegram was sent to the chairman of the House Subcommitee Tuesday from the board of managers of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers, asking that he propose an amendment to the teachers pay raise bill as it then stood, whereby the proposed 10 per cent pay raise would be made retroactive to September 1, 1942, instead of December 1. The telegram was authorized by the board, which was in regular session at the time, in the N. E. A. Building.

The board also decided to ask Congress to defer action on the McKellar bill, which would provide congressional sanction for all Government appointments in the $4500 class or over. The consensus of the members was that they wondered if valuable time is being wasted discussing this proposed legislation, which rightly should be used in prosecuting the war effort.

As a Bride, Woman Was 'Mean' to Mother-in-Law, Then a Widow Living With Her; Now the Widowed Mother of Married Children, She Tells Philosophy

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was much interested in the family situation discussed in your column last Sunday. This was the case of an attractive, young looking widow whose eldest son insisted that she share his home after he got married, two years ago, at the age of 38. Before marriage, his bride had agreed "very sweetly" to the arrangement, saying she knew nothing of housekeeping, etc. But very shortly afterward, trouble developed between the two women, brought on by the daughter-in-law's caustic criticism of nearly everything the older woman did. As a result, the mother-in-law finally moved out, over her son's objections; though not before she had called the wife's behavior to her son's attention, who, thereupon, tried to iron out the difficulty, but without success.

The story was told to you by the husband's married sister, who feels very strongly that their mother was infamously treated by the allegedly spoiled and selfish bride. Now, a second married son is urging the mother to share his home,—an invitation the daughter thinks her mother should accept. As she says, "None of us want mother to live alone; but the unhappy experience with my sister-in-law has left such a scar, to find anyone so mean, that she can't bring herself to move in with anyone." She seemed to expect you would indorse her worried concern for her mother. Fortunately for all concerned, you brought quite a different slant to the situation and told her to "let well enough alone."

Home Was Battleground Of Two 'Ideologies'

I feel a very special and friendly interest in this problem; for today I am the widowed mother of grown and married children; but in the early days of my married life, I was a daughter-in-law who found myself in a situation precisely similar to the one described. And my behavior toward my mother-in-law was "mean." The worst of it was, I knew I was being "mean." I simply couldn't help being jealous and resentful, and that made the situation doubly unbearable to me. My mother-in-law was a fine woman and I had the greatest respect for her; but our backgrounds were so dissimilar that we had no ideas in common.

She was very devout and strict about Sabbath observance. I had been brought up in a free-and-easy household. She believed in strict discipline for children and disapproved my method of handling mine. She made a third party in the evenings, when I wanted to be alone with my husband. I never had him to myself. She thought I spoiled my servants. And she criticized my meals; not overtly, but by refusing numerous dishes. When the experiment of living with us had proved a failure, she tried living with each of her two married daughters. There again, it didn't work. The matter was finally resolved by each of her children contributing a monthly sum to augment her small income, so that she could afford to live in a small family hotel.

From that time on, the most pleasant relations existed between her and me. I went often to see her, taking the children; and she came frequently to our house for meals,—proving by her willingness to "bury the hatchet," what a truly fine person she was. Now, in my turn, I am a widow; and my three children have married. But nothing on earth would induce me to settle myself in the home of any one of them.

Scolding Doesn't Help Victim of Melancholia

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In your column of March 2, a woman asked you advice on behalf of her mother, who at the age of 49, is so haunted by fear of old age that she can't sleep without sedatives and is chronically despondent. Some days later, one of your readers who signed herself "Maryland Matron" undertook to lecture this unfortunate victim of melancholia, —saying, among other things, that she needs "a good talking-to and not so much sympathy;" and that the prescription for cure is to "get something to do for a full eight hours a day;" something that will keep her mentally and physically active in the service of others. "Maryland Matron" outlined her own impressive schedule of happy activities, at the age of 52, as "proof of the pudding."

While I agree with "Maryland Matron" that 50 can be a more delightful age than 40, if you are blessed with good health and zest for living, I feel that her advice in this instance is comparable to telling an ailing infant to get up and walk, when he has not yet learned how to crawl. Just as you suggest, Miss Haworth, the woman in this case undoubtedly is suffering from psychic and glandular disturbance; and in all probability her depression of mind stems from endocrine imbalance, associated with the menopause. A condition of this kind robs the person of courage and powers of decision; and sets up all sorts of worries and vague forebodings.

New Medical Discoveries Come to Aid of Women

Fortunately, the medical profession has found the remedy in "estrogen," a chemical substance which, when intravenously administered, brings almost miraculous improvement. It is now being used by the most scientific physicians and is saving many women from mental breakdown. I happen to know two physicians in this community who are getting excellent results in their practice. The possibility of anemia should be carefully checked, of course; and the patient should be given the benefits of all the vitamins. As most of us know, the vitamin-B complex, plus B-1, and scientifically determined doses of "niacin," (one of the newly discovered "food supplements"), work wonders in most cases of mental depression. Indeed, I heard Dr. Thomas Spies (whose scientific discoveries have been mentioned in your column before),—relate in a radio broadcast how a violently "insane" young woman had been restored to normalcy by niacin dosage.

When this lady's health is "on the mend" as a result of proper medical treatment, she should, as a matter of course, set out to develop definite social interests that give her a pattern of useful self-expression quite independently of family connections. Thus only can she enjoy to the fullest the mature years of her life,—by being a prolific source of happiness to others, instead of an albatross around the neck of her daughter and friends. Sincerely yours, L. E. K.,

Don't Ration Your Smiles

How does your temper behave under wartime inconveniences?

When you have to wait longer than you used to for the elevator, do you greet the operator with a scowl and a sharp rebuke?

If a green clerk takes longer to serve you than he should, do you make caustic comments on his inefficiency?

When the telephone operator keeps you waiting, do you make sharp remarks about the poor service?

Do you grumble at the waitress who can give you only a limited amount of sugar? Or berate the corner groceryman when he tells you he has no more butter or coffee to sell?

These people are living in wartime too and meeting its inconveniences. Many of them have aching hearts because someone they love has gone to war.

Did it ever occur to you that part of your wartime job—along with buying bonds—is to take deprivations with good grace?

Flight Nurses Have Extensive Wardrobe

Training for service in the newest and perhaps the most spectacular war activity open to the women of the United States is the Evacuation Group of flight nurses, Army Nurse Corps, Kentucky. They minister to wounded soldiers being carried by air ambulance

TRANQUILLITY—EVEN IN WASHINGTON

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

It was something of a surprise to find that some people in Washington live with tranquillity and poise. After all the things we'd heard about the furor and frenzy of a wartime Capital, we'd practically expected to find everybody living with a suitcase on the knee. But a visit with an old dear friend reassured us . . . she lives in an apartment in the heart of Washington, convenient to her husband's office, yet their place is a peaceful retreat amid the swirling life all around them.

It is the home of Mr. and Mrs. David Godwin . . . he is in the forestry division of the Department of Interior . . . she is the well-known writer, Thelma Strabel, whose bright fiction is very popular. (She wrote "Reap the Wild Wind"—remember—and she has a new book coming out soon.)

The Red Vest

A Revolutionary ancester of Mr. Godwin's, (one Col. Daniel Stevens) really selected the fine red that is used in their living room (he selected it when he chose the bright red vest he wears in a portrait by Rembrandt Peale.) This portrait presides at one end of the living room; the red is repeated in a broad striped fabric used on the sofa at the other end of the room, in a leather chair and a lamp shade and fleetingly in the flowered chintz curtains. The walls of this room are soft periwinkle blue, the broadloom rug this same shade. The brilliantly flowered chintz curtains have an enormous bouquet pattern in garden colors on a pale yellow ground.

The living room is really a portrait of its owners, though—for all Col. Daniel Stevens in his red vest. For its details add up to a design of the Godwins' life there—quiet evenings of reading . . . days of writing . . . small brilliant parties rather than big indiscriminate crushes . . . much good talk and good music . . discussions over maps or charts.

Made to Fit

The coffee table is huge and presides over the "conversation corner" of the room, where corner windows look out on a woods. The Godwins had this table made especially to suit their fancy—cutting out a large piece of paper trying it in the corner to get the size they wanted. It had to be enough for spreading out maps or newspapers or whatever they wuold be discussing—with a shelf underneath for putting them away when they'd be having cocktails or coffee. They had their bookcases made too—these are painted the same blue as the walls except for the big knobs which are mahogany.

The dining room is gracious and smart too—qualities that don't go together too often. Amethyst candelabra in Bacarat crystal seem to key the colors of this room; the amethyst is repeated in the stripes on the chair seats.

A Pink Room

Mrs. Godwin, like many another successful career woman, had for years a secret yearning for a pink room, so that is what she now has—a pink room and very feminine from tip to toe. Faded pink walls and carpet—bois de rose draperies and chaise longue. She even has a doll here—a beautifully made character doll, Loxi, the heroine of her popular story, and made by a "fan."

Mr. Goodwin's room is comfortably masculine with Williamsburg green walls, beige carpet, a fine old desk and quite a collection of pictures, mostly from service in France and with the forestry service.

You can see that the Godwins are nice people. But they—and their home—are not quite so precise as perhaps we've lead you to believe. We have rakish remembrances of Thelma in Paris in the never-never world of the nineteen twenties. And there was David's sober reply to a genealogy inquiry from an elderly man whose name also happened to be Godwin. The old man took his ancestors very seriously and wanted to place David's line accurately on his family tree, so he wrote to ask whether David was descended from the ancient King Harold the Red or from King Harold's brother who raped the abbess of thus and such. David replied that he hoped his ancestor was the brother. The Godwin's apartment talks out of turn too sometimes—that's where the decorator, John Gerald, has been clever; he has kept it subtly but entirely the Godwin's own.

Who Has the Dough?

Who has all the extra money to spend,
That economists prate about end upon end?

"Not I! Not I" said Mrs. Drudge,
"For after I once to the grocer's trudge,
My pocketbook is as flat as a fritter,
And what's in my sack wouldn't make a bird twitter;
Then it's more for the cleaner and laundryman,
As bills daily become more gargantuan,
I take my shoes to be resoled,
I make over all the clothes that are old,
I save and skimp in all that I do,
Hoping a few cents will accrue,
To meet my husband's desperate plea,
That the income tax be 'found' by me!"

Who has all this surplus earning power,
That quickens inflation hour by hour?

"Not I! Not I!" said white-collared Miss Smart,
"I've just mailed my income tax check—in part;
Where the rent will come from, heaven knows,
Or where I'll get any summer clothes.
The price I must pay to get my dinner,
Is one that will make me grow daily thinner,
And after I go to the beauty shop,
My bank balance does a terrible flop.
(Yet if I hold my own in the career world,
My hair simply cannot go uncurled)
And when to bonds and relatives I meet obligation,
My problem's not spending—more nearly starvation."

Who is throwing around money so recklessly,
Who is behind all this buying spree?

"Not I! Not I!" said Susie Snooks,
"On fourteen-forty, I'm on tenterhooks
To meet my bill for my room and board,
And there's very little else I can afford,
After car fare, lunches, laundry and hose,
And a few very inexpensive clothes,
Doctor and dentist and permanent wave,
A payment on bonds, an occasional crave
For a movie, then a money order home,
(Yes, the tariff is high for this glimpse of the Dome)
And the income tax will drain the cup,
With this talk of 'loose money' I'm all fed up."

Now where can all this extra dough be hiding,
When all their poverty are confiding?

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Many a prospective mother avoids making her first visit to a doctor, assuring herself that it isn't necessary, she's perfectly all right. Pinned down, she admits that in truth she is "afraid" to go.

Such a childish, unbecoming emotion, in a woman old enough to bear a child, is inexcusable. Her first duty is not to her emotions but to her child, who must be supplied, through her, with the best feeding and whose health should be preserved by preservation of her own good health.

The time to start such good care as science has devised for her is when she first is aware that she is pregnant.

Naturally, once her condition has been established, a prospective mother will begin to worry about whether she wants a home or a hospital delivery. These problems can, in most cases, be left up to the attending doctor.

There are doctors who make a specialty of home deliveries especially for those mothers, already burdened with large families, who would find it difficult to be away from home for any length of time.

Until these days of unprecedented births, all mothers in a hospital got at least ten days of hospital care. In some hospitals where space is at a premium the time has had to be reduced to five days for all mothers who are in condition to be taken home at that time.

There are advantages to both home and hospital deliveries and the doctor will be glad to explain them and help the mother make up her mind.

No one who has visited a doctor and has decided upon a hospital need feel the least hesitancy about calling it or visiting there to see for herself the type of accommodation she will get for different sums of money and the supplies she will need to bring.

Neither should she feel any embarrassment about asking the doctor the size of his fee and the service that fee will provide. This is a business of a social transaction, and every prospective parent is entitled to know what she is expected to pay and if there are any "plans," by means of which these bills can be met.

It is far better to be frank in the beginning than to go on incurring bills which may be beyond the family's ability to meet. The emotional health of any mother depends upon the grown-up way in which she meets these, her first responsibilities of parenthood.

Our leaflet on, "The Prospective Mother," offers detailed advice on all questions (non-medical) which relate to this period. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

There isn't a woman over 25 who wouldn't give a lot to get better looking as time goes on instead of having to put up a fight to hold her own. I asked Connie Moore, stage and screen star, what it takes and she is sure the answer is just "plain right living."

Connie isn't anywhere near old enough to have to give a thought to the mark of time. But in the last three years her looks have undergone a change that is remarkable. She was pretty to start with, but she has turned into a very beautiful woman.

What is the secret? There isn't any. Connie declares her program is nothing but commonsense care, the kind every woman should take. But it is a day-in, day-out routine with her. She keeps her skin soap-and-water clean, brushes her hair until it is ready to stand on end, and gets as much rest as she needs. It's neglecting to get the proper rest that etches the tired lines in faces.

She has no special diet. She just goes by the good old nutrition yardstick. She eats three fruits and four vegetables and drinks three glasses of milk a day. She thinks those foods are wonderful for the complexion—and if they are the explanation of that exquisite skin of hers, the farmer should be rated as a beautician.

When she is in California, she swims every day. In New York, "It's awfully hard to find the time to get enough outdoor exercise." But I walk everywhere and I have a couple of exercises that, I think, are all anyone needs."

Boiled down, Connie's program is sound nutrition and adequate rest and exercise. She calls it "right living"—what else could it be!

CHAPTER II

Tom Cortell smiled. "I was wondering when you'd look up." He paused and then by way of explanation, "We work at all sorts of things down here."

He was a stocky man with a red, round face, a double chin and a wide, slightly comical grin.

Scott said: "I've noticed that everyone here seems to have two or three jobs."

"Yeah. You city people only come around here for a couple o' months, so we got to make the best of it."

"Fair enough."

Tom pushed a cloth along the bar. "How do you like the house? It ain't too lonely for you, is it?" His heavy lids were half shut, his watery eyes focused upon Scott's lean face. "I was wonderin' about that. If it is I can get you another one."

Scott answered quickly: "No. It is just what I wanted—big enough and comfortable enough. All those conveniences—like any home in the city—are certainly welcome. I tried the telephone just to see whether it worked or not and sure enough, it did."

Tom Cortell shifted his heavy shoulders and coughed to clear his throat. He was a diffident man for all his bulk. He said: "I had the screen porch fixed before you came and I checked on the refrigerator and the gas stove, so you won't have any trouble there. Nice family owns that place. They're afraid to come down here on account of the dimout. I guess you can't blame them, being as that house is so far out on the rocks like it is."

Scott smiled wryly. "Well, it is high enough from the sea, but from the sound of those waves sometimes, I would never think so." He thought of the heavy pounding of the ocean, lashing up against the rocks steadily, restlessly.

Scott continued, putting his voice down a tone, "Is there anyone living near me?"

Tom Cortell paused, seemingly considering, but Scott somehow knew that the man was feigning hesitancy, that he had the information ready.

Tom Cortell said finally "There was some one in the small shack down at the bottom of the hill and back in the bush a little, but I don't believe there's anyone there now."

Scott said slowly, "Well, it doesn't make any difference. Being alone is what I want. When I want to swim I can be alone, too; that long beach down over the rocks is ideal."

"Yeah. Good sand there. Soldiers are digging gun placements now, though. Makin' ready just in case." Cortell broke off and looked at Scott warily, as if he should not have spoken.

Scott was elaborately bland. "Is that so? I haven't seen them."

"Yeah." Tom Cortell looked aside as someone tapped the wood with a glass. "Excuse me, Mr. Hayden, but I guess the customers are callin'."

Scott played with the glass before him in his wide long-fingered hands, liking the feel of the moist coolness on his skin. He lifted it and took a short drink. Just then he turned his eyes in time to see the two men he had encountered on the street.

There were two empty stools at Scott's right and from the manner in which the men were moving toward where he was, Scott knew suddenly that they intended to occupy those seats. For a reason he could not explain he turned half away so that his broad back was full to the approaching men.

Looking off to his left he was surprised to see the girl he had encountered on the street. He was almost half around so that his view of her was not complete, but he recognized her hair. No two girls could have hair like that, he thought as he gazed at her. And then Scott remembered the way she had spoken and the hurried breathlessness of her voice. And too, there were other words recurring to him, words of these two men at his side.

To Be Continued.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Maryland Farmer Wields a Monkey Wrench

RAILROAD history is being made this week largely as the result of a battle by a Maryland farmer who exposed a deal between J. P. Morgan and the many-times financed Erie Railroad to refinance it again without benefit of competitive bidding—and without benefit to stockholders.

Back in Civil War days the Erie was the object of a historic financial battle, when Jay Gould and Daniel Drew stole its books, fled to New Jersey, and proceeded to issue paper stock beyond the reach of the stockholders. J. P. Morgan, the elder, and Commodore Vanderbilt fought in this deal.

In World War II, the long-bankrupt Erie, put through several receiverships, has been carrying record quantities of war goods and making money hand over fist. So Morgan Stanley & Co. (offshoot of J. P. Morgan) secretly negotiated the refinancing of $14,000,000 of Erie bonds held by the RFC.

This time the battle was between Morgan and Midwest bankers who were not allowed to bid. But Morgan's chief opponent actually turned out to be Eugene Casey, who owns two farms near Washington which he calls "New Deal Farm No. 1" and "New Deal Farm No. 2," and who also happens to own some stock in the Erie Railroad.

Because of Casey's loyalty to FDR he is on the White House staff as farm adviser, but he fought the Erie deal as a private individual, and incidentally delivered before the Interstate Commerce Commission one of the most scathing speeches since Roosevelt's "banking speech" March 4, 1933.

"I hope," he told the I. C. C., "that you will not silently sit and permit the repudiated money changers of America subtly and in slinking fashion to ease back into the temples of American unorthodox finance. . . .

"Only the bankers and brokers and directors can ever destroy capitalism in this country," Casey continued, "by methods such as this, in undermining the inherent faith of the American people in their financial and corporate institutions."

Casey claimed that instead of profiting by the deal, the Erie Railroad actually would lose about $16,000, while the United States Treasury would lose about a million dollars in taxes. He also contended that the deal had been put across by Frank J. Wright, a director of Erie, who was drawing money not only from Erie but also from the RFC at $30 a day as a railroad adviser.

As a result of Casey's expose it looks as if the Interstate Commerce Commission would reverse itself and take the bond deal away from Morgan. It also looks as if the I. C. C. would make railroad history by requiring competitive bidding on all railroad financing from now on.

Prentiss Brown's Pants

OPA Boss Prentiss Brown isn't letting the public hullabaloo over OPA questionnaires get him down.

"No one can tell me anything about questionnaires," says the former Michigan Senator. "I had my first experience with a questionnaire at the tender age of 13."

On his thirteenth birthday, Brown decided he was approaching man's estate and persuaded his mother to buy him a pair of long pants. Mrs. Brown wrote to a mail-order house.

A letter came back requesting more information: "Is your boy (1) tall, (2) medium, or (3) short?"

"My mother replied that I was medium," says the OPA chief, "but despite this broad specification, I got the slickest fit you ever saw."

Why the Japs Know

HERE is an excerpt from the Interior Department's annual 1941 report, which indicates why the Japs know so much about the Aleutian Islands:

"The floating plant Kosei Maru, with auxiliary craft consisting of nine trawlers, was engaged from May to August, 1940, in taking halibut and cod in Bering Sea about 100 miles northeast of the Pribilof Islands, with one additional trawler during the last week or two of the season. The vessel was reported to have left for Japan toward the end of August.

"This is the eleventh consecutive year that Japanese floating plants have operated in these waters, the number of vessels having varied from one to four, with the usual complement of tenders."

NOTE: Under international law it is impossible to prevent foreign fishermen from fishing in foreign waters.

Friend or Enemy

WAR Department officials, in their off moments, are making a collection of the signs and countersigns used by men in the Army to indicate to sentries the approach of a friendly patrol.

In the old 1940 days of the slow-moving defense program, when stove pipes were used for guns, the word "stove" was commonly shouted by the sentry, and the word "pipe" was the proper countersign.

Another challenge, "seven" and "11," was abandoned during maneuvers, because the answer was too obvious. Officer candidate classes often use the date of graduation as a sign and countersign, such as "March" and "11," because the date when he will get his bars is indelibly stamped on the mind of each man.

Such words as "boogie" and "woogie" . . . "hep" and "cat" are used often because they are calculated to confuse even an English-speaking enemy.

"Whisky" and "soda" used to be popular, but it was found too often that when a sentry yelled "Whisky," the other man answered "Where?"

Merry-Go-Round

WAR TRANSPORT Czar Joe Eastman says he gets a bushel of letters and postcards every week suggesting that he bar Mrs. Roosevelt from traveling. . . . Old Washington observers who have seen previous Presidents suffer from getting out of touch with the Nation, wish FDR had two Mrs. Roosevelts to keep him posted about U. S. sentiment. Any President who loses contact with the people is finished, and every President, especially in wartime, has to be engrossed on myriads of immediate, close-up problems. . . . Connecticut Congresswoman Clare Luce has another catchword up her sleeve. This time it will not be "globaloney" but "globalignment. . . . Gaunt, gray Bernie Baruch, receiving visitors on a park bench, got a call from Assistant Rubber Czar Dewey urging that Baruch head up committees to study food, crops, strategic materials, as he did for rubber. . . . The House of Representatives really listened when Minnesota's freshman Congressman, Dr. Walter Judd, made his maiden speech on China. For years a medical missionary in China, Dr. Judd also had toured the U. S. A. for two years before Pearl Harbor urging an embargo on war materials to Japan.

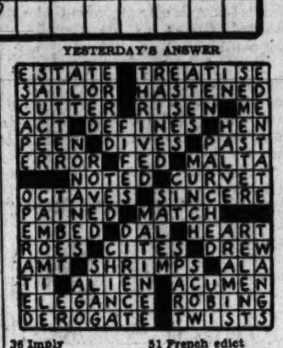
YESTERDAY'S ANSWER



Restaurants Demand Ease Of Food Rules

Members of the National Restaurant Association gathering in Washington this week have warned Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown that the Nation's restaurants cannot continue to operate unless restrictions on the use of processed foods are considerably relaxed, an association spokesman revealed yesterday.

Robert J. Wilson, Washington secretary of the National Association, and executive secretary of the Washington association, said that the price administrator, his administrative assistant, Clyde Herring, and Dr. Archie Palmer, in charge of food rationing, had agreed that some adjustment was necessary in the restaurant restrictions.

Other developments on the rationing front yesterday included a statement by OPA officials that coffee coupon No. 26, good after March 22, will be good for five weeks instead of six, thus increasing the Nation's coffee ration.

The ten-day period of registration for institutions, restaurants, hotels, canteens, and other industrial and institutional users of processed fruits and vegetables ended yesterday.

Eighteen leading restauranteurs from as many large cities have been in Washington for a week, seeking a solution to their rationing problem. The association claims that its member restaurants feed 30 million people daily. Some chains represented serve 130 million meals annually.

The association asserts that members supplies of processed foods have been cut from 75 to 90 per cent by OPA Order R-1307. The members conferring with the Price Administrator pointed out that restaurants could not make up for such out in processed food supplies by using fresh vegetables, because the supply of these is short and distribution spotty.

The association also claims that the restaurants are facing such a serious shortage of labor that they cannot assure the additional burden of preparing fresh vegetables.

Speaking for the association, Wilson said that members had made a Nation-wide check on wholesale and brokers warehouses and found them "bulging" with supplies of processed foods.

Calls are coming to the group meeting here this week from all parts of the United States asserting that 50 per cent of the restaurants in some States would close shortly unless permitted to have supplies.

Bill of Rights Infringements Hit in Trial Plea

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Asserting that infringements of the Bill of Rights are no less intolerable when they masquerade as license laws, counsel for large groups of citizens yesterday urged the Supreme Court to reverse its 5-to-4 decision that license fees may be collected from those who distribute religious pamphlets.

The court upheld the convictions of several members of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect, for selling their booklets without paying the license fees imposed by the towns of Opelika, Ala., Fort Smith, Ark. and Casa Grande, Ariz.

The court granted a rehearing, which began yesterday. Consolidated with the earlier case were the appeals of several persons who were convicted of violating similar regulations in Jeannette, Pa.

Hayden C. Covington, attorney for the religious group, told the justices that the upholding of the license laws opened the door to grave violations of the constitutional freedoms of speech, worship and the press.

Covington said that when the logical implications of the decision were considered, it appeared "the most serious denial of liberty within the history of the Nation."

The court said in its first decision that the State had power to limit the constitutional freedoms "to times, places and methods not at odds with the preservation of peace and good order."

The justices were told yesterday that a State or city which is given this much power to limit freedom will have—as a practical matter—the power to brush the Bill of Rights aside.

Governments, it was pointed out, always contend that they are infringing liberay to preserve peace and good order.

These and like arguments were advanced by others who obtained leave of court to take part in the case.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association declared in its brief that "any tax or other exaction which falls directly upon the act of circulating (printed matter) is an unconstitutional restraint upon the liberty of the press."

The general convention of Seventh Day Adventists, through Former Attorney General Homer Cummings and Attorney Millward C. Taft, told the court that many cities already impose licenses taxes so high that they suppress religious and other publications. The regulations before the court were no isolated instances, the brief said, but manifestations of "a wave of so-called licensing legislation which cannot reasonably be regarded as other than prohibitive in purpose and effect."

For instance, said the brief, the tax in Nogales, Ariz., is $50 a day; in Sioux City, Iowa, $25 a day; in Corbin, Ky., $10 a week; in Wickenburg, Ariz., $200 a year.

The American Civil Liberties Union also submitted a brief opposing the taxes.

Fred B. Trescher spoke briefly late yesterday in support of the license laws of Jeannett, Pa. He will resume his argument today.

Kindler Receives Ovation At Tasteful Program Here

By Ray C. B. Brown

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday night in Constitution Hall. Program: Overture to "Les Petits Riens" (Mozart-Kindler), Symphony No. 9 in E minor (Dvorski), 'Le Tombeau de Couperin" (Ravel), Entr'acte from "Khovanshchina" (Musorgski), Polonaise from "Evgen Onegin" (Chaikovski).

At the penultimate Wednesday subscription concert of the National Symphony Orchestra last evening in Constitution Hall, Dr. Hans Kindler led off the program with his own sympathetic and tasteful dressing-up of the overture written by Mozart for Noverre's ballet, "Les Petits Riens." This lively and graceful little piece can well stand just such a strengthening, for it was probably dashed off in a hurry, together with a dozen dances for the ballet, which was staged with Piccini's opera, "Le Finte Gemelle." The ballet trifles are all that survive of the music composed by Mozart during his unfortunate visit to Paris in 1778, for no trace has ever been found of two works commissioned by Jean Le Gros, director of the Concert Spiritual: alternative numbers for a "Miserere" by Ignatz Holzbauer, and a Symphonie Concertante for flute, oboe, horn and bassoon. The latter was never performed.

BROWN

Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony, absent from the orchestra's programs for a couple of years, was put on again in response to requests that have been made from time to time by patrons. The revival was well worth hearing in the vitalized and brilliant reading by Dr. Kindler and his responsive players. The last of Dvorak's nine symphonies, although persistently called the fifth, it is his masterpiece in that form because of its absolute sincerity, its impassioned character and its strong personal feeling, not to speak of the beauties of melodic invention. It is virtually a letter from a temporary exile, telling of the impressions made upon him by the vastness and the picturesque strangeness of America, and voicing his intense homesickness.

New in the orchestra's repertoire was Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," which was performed with a delightful care for the composer's stylistic mannerisms. The orchestral version retains only four of the six movements in the original suite for piano, and one can only surmise why Ravel omitted the fugue and the toccata. As it stands in its panapoly of instrumental colors, the suite has great piquancy and charm. The old forms of forlane, menuet and rigaudon are treated with a certain amount of irreverence characteristic of Ravel's mordant humor which found its way even into his tribute to Francois Couperin le Grand. But Ravel without his wit, would be quite another person.

For the closing numbers of the program Dr. Kindler chose the sombre and purely Slavic entr'acute from Musorgski's "Khovanshchina" and for contrast the impetuous polonaise from Chaikovski's "Evgen Onegin." Musorgski's genius, so powerful in its naivete, made Chaikovski's talent seem superficial, yet the dash and scintillance of the polonaise roused the audience to an ovation for the conductor and the orchestra.

U. S. Counsel Offer Pepco Data Today

Attorneys for five Federal agencies—Treasury Department's Procurement division, the OPA, Public Buildings Administration, Department of Justice and the Office of the Director of Economic Stabilization—today will begin introduction of testimony by which they hope to prove, before the Public Utilities Commission, that rates of Potomac Electric Power Co. should be slashed by some two million dollars.

Of national interest, because of the issues raised by powerful government agencies moving in on the jurisdiction of a regulatory body, the PUC hearing also is being watched by Washingtonians who have a direct interest in whatever rate reductions, if any, finally are adopted.

Tax Appeal Board Held Empowered To Cut Valuations

A decision which said in effect that the District Board of Tax Appeals has been erroneous in its contention that it did not have the power to make adjustments in real property valuations, was handed down yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals here.

Associate Justice Fred M. Vinson, who wrote the opinion, said that "the statue conferring this jurisdiction upon the Board of Tax Appeals expressly imposes the duty to 'affirm, cancel, reduce or increase the assessment' and that the power of the board to reduce the assessment here is beyond question."

The opinion was rendered in the case of three property owners who appealed the tax appeal board's contention that it did not have the authority to reduce an assessment after acknowledging that such a reduction was justified.

The petitioners in the case were George D. Watrous, jr., Roberta C. Watrous and Howard Hosmer, owners of adjoining lots at 5027 and 5031 Reno Road Northwest, which were originally valued by the Board of Assistant Assessors and the Board of Equalization and Review at $4008.

United Nations Bound to Win Says Veteran Greek Skipper

First Naval Attache of Embassy Here Lauds America's Part in War

By Patricia Grady

"I speak with my heart."

Capt. Alfred L. Leondopoulos grows eloquent when he praises the kindness and friendship of Americans for his native Greece. First Greek Naval Attache to the United States this tall, graying-haired officer, who wears five rows of decorations on his serge uniform, finds many things in Washington reminiscent of his own country.

"Your magnificent government buildings," he explains, "are patterned on Greek architecture and symbolize the revival of the ancient Greek spirit of democracy. Just as the towering skyscrapers of New York reflect another facet of America—your dynamic force and modern strength."

A real warrior of the sea, Captain Leondopoulos started out his fighting career in the Balkan Wars after graduating from the Greek Naval Academy in 1912. During the more than eight years of war in which the Greeks engaged from then until the start of the present conflict, the captain took part in every campaign. He commanded the last ship that left Greece and brought the Greek government to Crete and went on from there to Egypt.

During the evacuation, the Greek fleet sustained great losses—more than half of its forces—but joined the Allies and is still fighting as a unit. Captain Leondopoulos is particularly proud of his former command, the Queen Olga, for on December 21 she was mentioned in a British Admiralty dispatch as participating in operations which resulted in the sinking of 14 Axis ships. On land, sea and air the compact Greek forces are continuing to give a splendid account of themselves.

United Nations Hold Seas, He Says

"We are going to win this war for certain," says the captain with quiet assurance. "The American admiral, Alfred Mahan, laid stress on the influence of sea power on the history of the world, and Pericles said, 'It's a great thing to hold the seas.' The United Nations do hold the seas and our morale and skill guarantees the final success. Industry, too, is all-important, and the powerful expansion of American production is beginning to be felt. The leadership of America has been proved in the Pacific and in the African campaign. We know now, from the facts, that a skillful use of weapons combined with gallantry and determination show remarkable results. We are confident that we will win the war quicker than is anticipated."

His Ambition Is Realized

Speaking fluently the English he learned in his school years, the captain is devoting himself to learning slang—"that vivid language of America"—and proudly asserts that in his five months here he has become partially "Americanized." Allusions to ancient Greek philosophers and writers sprinkle the conversation of this officer who describes himself as "a sailor, not a diplomat." He senses the warmth of America and is grateful for it, for he feels it reflects the attitude of the United States toward his gallant country.

While Captain Leondopoulos was in Egypt, it was his desire to come to Washington as Naval Attache. That wish now realized, he is as enthusiastic about the United States as he thought he would be.

The captain has been very much pleased by the popularity of the Greek exhibit going on this month in the United Nations headquarters. "In this exhibit we try to show a little of our country," he explains. "I have always been astonished by the keenness of Americans for Greek culture. The way they are responding to this exhibit is just another example of that keenness."

French Air Ace Feted by Col., Mme. Luguet

"Ah yes, two children I have, a boy and a girl, 13 and 10 years old. The boy's name? Well, as you say, off the record, it is ——. Why not on the record? Well, the name you know me by is not mine. When we fly with the Fighting French we take always another name. Why? Well, if we are shot down over France, and the papers have another name on them, then the enemy does not take revenge on the family. And I have a mother, my wife and two children to protect."

There, in a paragraph is the story of the airmen of the Fighting French. He, the speaker, was introduced to the guests as Commandant B. Duperier, Commandant of the Free French Squadron, Ile de France. Hosts at the party which was given for him yesterday afternoon at the Carlton were Col. Charles Luguet, the Representative of the Fighting French Air Force in Washington and Mme. Luguet.

Guests, who dropped in between the twilight hours of 5:30 to 7:30, included most of the Air Attaches of the Embassies of the United Nations.

One, of course, did not ask for the real name of the guest of honor, but the host and hostess were almost eager to tell of the prowess of this quiet mannered man. He, who spoke only of his children and the home in France, has been, since autumn of 1940, with the Fighting French in London. He took part in the famous Dieppe raid. He has also, during the past nine months, personally accounted for, that it to say sunk, 5 planes, 3 ships and damaged 14 other ships. Not a bad record for one man.

Of medium height, slender, with receding dark blond hair, cleanly chiseled features and the blue eyes that most aviators seem to have, Commandant Duperier has been in this country for over a month, but expects to leave any day. His trip to this country is a combination of rest cure, after nine straight months of daily raid duty, and a mission of which no one speaks.

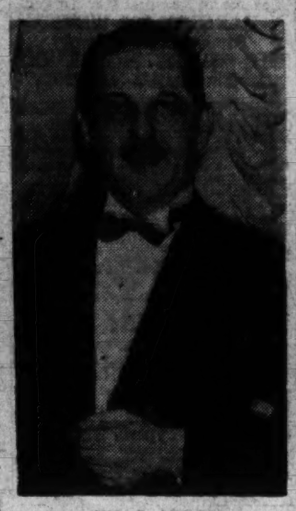
A Backward Glance at a Dinner That Made Capital History on Many Accounts and Marked the End of An Era on Two Scores; Something New in Testimonials

"I never went to a testimonial dinner that was fun, before," observed an Air Corps colonel as he made his way through the throng leaving the Statler's swanky presidential dining room at a late hour Tuesday night.

Virtually every one of the 600 guests, all of whom have probably attended . . . and been bored by . . . countless testimonial fetes, would have agreed with him. For even though the program included many speeches, oratory was neatly interlarded with enough bacon of buffoonery to produce a crisp and light effect. Attorney General Francis Biddle, for example, paid tribute to his former trust-busting assistant on numerous accounts, not the least of which was that "Life with Thurman was never dull . . . and while we often opened the morning newspaper with fear and trembling for what he might have been doing, we knew at least the account would be lively, interesting and significant."



JUSTICE ARNOLD

House Speaker Sam Rayburn looked out over the sea of faces and observed that out in his part of the country, "Any man who could get as many friends as this together would run for an office instead of accepting a judicial appointment." House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin decried the fact that if there was a single other Republican present beside himself, he didn't know who it was; and Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, toastmaster, later observed that up to last November, "Representative Martin probably wouldn't have known a Republican if he saw one."

"I've been asked to hold up the Yale end of this testimonial program," said Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, as he arose to his feet, and the occasion. Then, in reminiscent vein, he told something of Arnold's "life under the elms at New Haven" when both he and Douglas were on the Yale University faculty. "At that time, a gathering such as this is would have been 'a real jackpot,'" Justice Douglas said, going on to explain that members of the faculty, being fully aware of the power of publicity, used the point system in grading their rising importance—so many points for mention in the Yale Register, the New York newspapers, the Yale Review, and so on. "Even having an invitation to a party like this one would have rated at least 50 points. But being guest of honor—well, it would certainly have been the jackpot."

In a more serious vein was the speech of Senator Robert La Follette, who deplored the fact that Arnold was bowing out as a trust-buster just at a time when a man of his courage, integrity and ability was so badly needed. Senator Alben Barkley and Arthur Whiteside tossed innumerable bouquets to Justice Arnold in the course of their talks; while Production Czar Henry J. Kaiser read his speech on "free enterprise as the fifth freedom," and emphasized the part Arnold had played in helping to preserve that freedom.

Whispered comments — not all complimentary, I'm afraid—rippled around the room during the first part of the program when Toastmaster O'Mahoney mentioned that among the many telegrams received at the banquet hall was one from Representative Clare Boothe Luce. She expressed regret that in a time when "so many demigods" were running the Government, a courageous man like Thurman Arnold should be stepping out of a place in which he could be of such great service to the country.

Green with envy was virtually everybody at the dinner when Tom C. Clark, first assistant to Mr. Arnold, presented to Mrs. Arnold those handsome Sheffield silver wine cooler-decanters. But the gift to the Appeals Court's newest justice could not be handed over in full, for whereas two judicial robes had been ordered only one appeared in time to be formally handed over to the guest of honor.

"It's the end of an era on at least two scores," mourned a couple of newspapermen as they put on their coats at the end of the dinner. "We'll never have another trust-buster who is as good 'copy' as Thurman Arnold . . . and, for the duration at least, we'll never have another big testimonial dinner like this to write about."

He had something there; for as everyone knows by this time, the Arnold party was scheduled just a hair's breadth before the ban on banqueting went into effect. From now until the end of the war—and probably even then—there won't be any more testimonial dinners like the one that chalked off both personal and political honors for Thurman Arnold.

Lieut. Sheldon Dies, Casualty Of Naval War

Lieut. William DuBose Sheldon, U. S. N. R., died yesterday at the Marine Corps Air Station, El Centro, Calif. Lieutenant Sheldon had been through some of the heaviest fighting at Gaudalcanal, and his death resulted from the effects of his service and a complication of tropical diseases. He was 30 years of age.

Lieut. Sheldon was widely known, respected and loved. He was a graduate of Western High School, Princeton University, and Harvard Law School. His senior thesis at Princeton, "The Populist Movement in Virginia," was so highly considered that it was published and distributed by the Princeton University Press. While attending law school he was given a minor position on the faculty as undergraduate counselor for law students.

In 1938 he became associated with the local law firm of Covington, Burling, Rublee, Acheson & Shorb. His work related in large part to the law of aviation, and while so employed he learned to fly.

Lieutenant Sheldon was a bachelor. Before entering the Navy he made his home at Hockley with a group of young lawyers. He was secretary of the Princeton Alumni Association of the District of Columbia. He was completely unselfish and had innumerable friends.

Lieutenant Sheldon entered the Navy as an ensign in February, 1942, and was promoted to lieutenant junior grade and later to a full lieutenancy. He was attached to a flight squadron, and found himself at Guadalcanal shortly after the American landing. He was there for six weeks during some of the most intensive fighting. He was last in Washington in December, 1942, on a brief leave.

Lieutenant Sheldon is survived by his father, Rear Admiral Luther S. Sheldon, jr., Medical Corps, U. S. N., 3203 Cleveland Avenue Northwest; a sister, Mrs. John F. Taggart, 8320 Fourteenth Street, Silver Spring, Md., and an aunt, Mrs. Chester Flather, 4339 Garfield Street Northwest.

Wife's Career

Million for Radio Show Starts Suit

JEAN TENNYSON

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—The board of directors of the Celanese Corp. of America was charged today, in a stockholder's action, with spending more than one million dollars to further the career of Jean Tennyson, radio singer, described as the wife of the corporation's president, Camille Dreyfus.

The action was filed in Supreme Court by Seymour Bayer. It sought recovery of $1,350,000 from the directors of the corporation, which manufactures yarns and fabrics.

Bayer charged that, despite the fact the corporation's production was curtailed, and that it was unable to fill the demand from its products, the directors embarked on an advertising program costing more than one million dolars for 1942, in sponsoring a weekly half-hour radio musical over Station WABC and a network of 116 stations of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The featured singer, the complaint stated, was Miss Tennyson, the wife of Dreyfus, and it charged the program "was designed to further, foster and subsidize the career, fortunes and popularity of said Jean Tennyson."

Viereck Asks Indictment Be Dismissed

George Sylvester Viereck, the Nazi agent who calls himself a "political prisoner," sought the aid of the Supreme Court for the second time yesterday, asking the justices to issue a new mandate dismissing the indictment accusing him of violating the Foreign Agents Act.

Last week the court set aside Viereck's 2-to-6-year prison sentence for violating the Foreign Agents Act because there were technical errors in his case. Justice F. Dickinson Letts then placed Viereck under $1000 bond and he went free pending a second trial.

The German agent immediately applied for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming the Supreme Court intended to dismiss the indictment against him. Yesterday his attorneys—Col. O. R. McGuire and Emil Morosini, jr., of New York—had withdrawn the writ and turned to the Supreme Court.

Viereck now asks the court to make its mandate "more definite and certain" by instructing Justice Letts to dismiss the indictment.

Since he was convicted of hiding the huge pro-German propaganda organization he set up with the aid of contacts in Congress, Viereck has been indicted for seditious conspiracy. This case is expected to come to trial in a few weeks.

Bishop Freeman Ordered to Take 'A Complete Rest'

On the orders of his doctor, all lenten engagements of The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, have been canceled, and he will take a "complete rest until Easter."

BISHOP FREEMAN

Washington Cathedral officials said the 73-year old prelate "is suffering from a state of nervous and physical exhaustion."

Attending him are Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, Dr. William Clark and Dr. H. R. Screiber. According to the Canon Raymond L. Wolven, rector of Ascension Episcopal Church here and the bishop's son-in-law, they believe that "if this period of rest is carried out, there is no reason why he sould not resume his normal activities in the diocese."

Because of his health, Bishop Freeman has made few public appearances in the last few months. In January he attended the International Reform Federation's annual breakfast on Capitol Hill accompanied by Dr. Bowen, his personal physician.

Lord's Prayer, Topic of Sermon Of Rev. L. R. Tabor

The spirit of the Lord's Prayer is one of recognition, of reverence and of community, the Rev. L. Ralph Tabor said last night in his first sermon as new pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle.

"Recognition, for we belong to God; community, for He is 'ours' and not 'mine,' and reverence, for in His presence we are at the dwelling place of that which is perfect, complete and final," he declared.

Mr. Tabor launched a series of Lenten sermons on "Toward Understanding the Lord's Prayer." He will continue the series on subsequent Lenten Wednesdays. He is a former pastor of Baltimore's Third Lutheran Church, and will be formally installed as pastor Sunday at 8 p. m.

Nelson Seeks 'Known' Man For Big Job

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Realizing that a major operation must be made upon the civilian economy to squeeze this country through a forthcoming manpower pinch, War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson was reported yesterday seeking a "broad gauge" man of national prominence to head a strengthened Office of Civilian Supply.

The post of director of Civilian Supply is now held by Joseph Weiner, who succeeded former Price Administrator Leon Henderson in the post. It is reported that Nelson would like to retain Weiner in a top Civilian Supply job, assisting the new director who probably would be vested with the title of WPB vice chairman.

One Rejection Reported

The job was reported already offered to Chester Davis of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Board, but it was said that Davis indicated he did not want the job. Since then, others have been approached, although their names were not disclosed.

The War Manpower Commission already has provided an example of what this stepped-up Office of Civilian Supply will have to do.

Several weeks ago, WMC notified WPB that the labor supply problem in Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Oreg., would be greatly eased if non-war industries employing 30,000 workers in each town could be shut down. Civilian Supply, as a branch of WPB, was asked to study the question and has already discovered that it is one of the "hottest" ever presented to a government agency.

Both cities are now devoted mainly to shipbuilding, but they also contain many small businesses, with particular emphasis on furniture manufacturing and candy-making. To shut down all these "little fellows" would create a terrific outcry, it is believed.

Another Way Out

As a result, the WPB has turned to considering the possibility of "concentrating" such activities away from labor shortage areas by general regulations which would not single out specific cities for special treatment as would individual action on Seattle and Portland.

Other problems which Civilian Supply must face are the following:

1. Assisting with the development of a more aggressive program of steering war contracts away from overcrowded areas wherever possible.

2. Development of broad programs to "concentrate" industry where such programs will work to save materials or manpower.

3. Ordering goods simplified to save manpower.

4. Simplifying services to the same end.

5. Developing plans for "minimum" civilian programs and then taking steps to see that materials are made available for these programs. Production schedules almost as strict as schedules for war goods will have to be worked out to save manpower, it is believed.

Main job done by the Office of Civilian Supply to date has been to provide the drive which finally resulted in the conversion of the auto and other large metal-consuming industries to war work. Then, OCS was in the role of curtailing civilian heavy goods production because of materials shortages. To curtail nonwar activities merely to free manpower is a much more difficult job to sell to the American people—which is why Nelson wants to bring in an outstanding figure.

Officials now agree that Civilian Supply must be kept in the War Production Board. For some time official consideration had been given to providing an independent status for OCS.

OCS developed a study of "bedrock" civilian requirements which is expected to provide a basis for further actions. However, it is understood that WPB does not believe the civilian economy need be reduced completely to bedrock, but rather to some intermediate point below present levels.

Smaller Vegetable, Fruit Crops Laid To Reduced Acreage

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

America's hopes for accenting fresh vegetables and fruits to make up for rationed supplies of canned goods received a jolt yesterday with release of a Department of Agriculture report that yields on six early crops are running far below expectations.

Asparagus, cabbage, cauliflower, celery and strawberries all are running under last year's harvesting records in the southern and southwestern States, and tomatoes are well below goals set for them.

Although other commercial truck farming areas with later seasons may bring up the national averages, there is the possibility they also will be off. Reductions in four of the crops, the report shows, are due to a reduction in the number of acres planted and not to poor weather. This indicates farm labor and machinery shortages may be reflected in reduced planting throughout the country, as farm leaders in Congress have been contending.

Detailed Report

Crop by crop, the Agriculture Department's report shows:

Asparagus—The 1943 yield now is expected to be 6,333,000 crates in Arizona, California, South Carolina and Georgia, which is about 10 per cent below the 1942 yield of 7,031,000 crates from the same States. Acreage was reduced in each State except Arizona, and yields are expected to average lower on acres planted.

Cabbage—Prospects for the 1943 yield in Arizona, California, Florida and Texas declined 8000 tons in February, with all of the reduction coming in Texas. It now appears that 286,000 tons will be harvested, although the yield in these States last year was 436,960 tons. This reduction of almost 40 per cent comes at a time when the use of cabbage is being boosted and the Secretary of Agriculture is asking for a cabbage production increase.

Tomatoes—Acres to be harvested in California, Florida and the lower valley of Texas are indicated to be 42,500. This is 300 more acres than were planted in the area last year—but there has been a sharp reduction in California and a moderate decrease in Florida, despite all-out efforts to boost production of this vitamin-filled war food.

Increase in Texas

There has been an increase of 5000 acres planted in Texas, but the California and Florida decreases nearly offset it. The farm labor situation in California and all along the West Coast is known to be critical.

Strawberries—Acreage reduction in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas has been "drastic," according to the report, which states yields expected now are 1,430,000 crates—or 484,000 crates under last year.

In "intermediate" States the strawbery acreage is 22 per cent under last year, the report says. The Department of Agriculture, however, had not expected to increase production of this perishable crop and it is possible growers are shifting to other war crops.

Cauliflower—The field in California and Oregon is expected to be 17 per cent below last year's, although yield per acre will be higher.

Celery—Acreage in California and Florida is approximately 1000 below the number harvested there last spring. This crop, too, has been scheduled for "de-emphasis" and if farmers had shifted to war vegetables Secretary Wickard would have been pleased.

Newsprint Supply Ample, Study Indicates

New York, March 10.—An exhaustive and independent investigation by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, which will be continued, agrees with the findings of Washington and Ottawa that Canada is able to meet newsprint requirements in the months ahead. Approximately 75 per cent of the newsprint used in the United States comes from Canada.

Only a few weeks ago reports from Washington said that some high officials were insisting that a reduction in newsprint consumption up to 40 or 50 per cent was necessary immediately. Confirmation of some of those rumors has come through publication of the recent report of the WPB Office of Civilian Supply on the basic needs in a stringent war economy, this report saying that a reduction of 40 per cent in newsprint could be endured.

From time to time various reasons have been given for the necessity of reducing further newsprint production and consumption. These reasons have varied in importance at the moment but they have included estimated shortages of electric power, transportation, labor and wood, as well as some tightness in critical materials like copper.

So as to cut through the haze of gossip and opinions that have been making the atmosphere heavy for some months, the A. N. P. A. sometime ago initiated a survey of the overall paper and pulp picture, especially with reference to Canada.

President Strengthens Hand of OWI

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

The Office of War Information was materially strengthened on two fronts yesterday by a reorganization of its domestic service and a victory through presidential action over the Office of Strategic Services in the two agencies' undercover dispute over control of propaganda abroad.

By executive order, President Roosevelt gave Elmer Davis' office responsibility for the planning, development and execution of "all phases of the Federal program of radio, press, publication and related foreign propaganda activities involving the dissemination of information."

White House Secretary Stephen Early said the Office of Strategic Services, headed by Col. William J. (Wild Bill) Donovan, would continue to handle military matters in cooperation with the Army and Navy.

The White House was finally asked to intercede in the dispute after months of controversy. Army and Navy chiefs of staff brought the issue to a head late in 1942 by issuing a directive asserting that the OSS should be the central agency for planning propaganda in actual and prospective zones of American military operations abroad.

Davis, strongly disagreeing, took the position that the OWI was specifically assigned to this job under a presidential directive. It was not, he contended, meant to be merely a division of the OSS.

Under yesterday's order, OWI's authority was limited to United States, Canada and abroad, but not Latin America which is now under the jurisdiction of Nelson Rockefeller's Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

Major effects of the domestic branch reorganization, which is expected to save the agency $400,000 in a proposed domestic budget of about 10 million dollars, include the dismissal of about 100 employes and the abolishment of the Bureau of Intelligence which served as a poll taking agency. The domestic branch of OWI carried about 1500 employes.

Domestic Director Gardner Cowles, jr., said "the reorganization represents an effort to gear ourselves up better to what is primarily our job of helping the press, radio, and other media to get out the news of the war and the information the people at home need to win it."
